FACTORY BLAZE CAUSES A CALL FOR ALL ENGINES

The Cambridge Fire Department, aided by assistance from Somerville, fought a hard battle at noon to-day with a fire in the Warren Brothers Company granolithic works on Potter street near Third, in the heart of the manufacturing district of East Cambridge.

Three alarms were sounded, calling out all of the Cambridge apparatus, and help was summoned from Somerville.

Huge Quantities of Tar Ignited.

Flames were discovered in the north building of the works and about 1 o'clock in a short time huge quantities of tar in the building and a great mass of the granolithic compound were forming there. Volumes of dense black smoke poured over the tenements in the vicinity, causing a fright among the dwellers, most of whom were foreigners who feared a repetition of the Chelsea fire.

Adjoining buildings of the company were threatened. The building in flames was a one and a half story wooden structure of odd shape, covering perhaps a quarter of an acre of ground. Five or six other wooden buildings adjoined it. Opposite was the factory of the Boston Blacking Company, while on one side was the storage yard of the Cambridge Gas Light Company, filled with coal and coke and crowned with huge storage tanks filled with gas.

The second call put a force to work to cut down the gas light company's building, lest in the rear of the burning building the huge bomber yard of the W. H. Wood company is located. The two plants are separated by the Broad canal. Sparks from the fire lowered over the lumber yard and a heavy rain of cinders fell, but these fires had to be said there to prevent the fire spreading.

The building in which the fire started was old and the loss is estimated at between $5,000 and $7,000. Within an hour from the time the flames were first discovered the fire was under control. For a time it looked as if the fire would spread and threaten one of the most dangerous in the history of Cambridge.

No cause has been assigned for the starting of the blaze, but it is believed by many that one of the mixing ovens in the wooden building became overheated and ignited the contents.

CHICAGO, Oct. 22.—Cub fans will have a chilly time of it at the West Side park today. The rain of yesterday has given place to a chilly wind and the cloudy sky gives promise of rain.

To-day's game is perhaps the most crucial of any in the whole series. The Philadelphia Athletics need only the one game to win the world's championship, and they will play Bender in the box. Bender is in perfect form, and his performance in the opening game has taken the nerve of the Cub players.

On the other hand, Manager Chance is up against it for a pitcher. He must make a choice of either Cole or Brown in the hope that one of them may be able to hold down the Athletics, while the batsmen beat out a few runs.

Veteran vs. Recruit.

It is a case of a veteran against recruit. Brown, the veteran, pitched the other day and was in shockingly bad form. Cole is a youngster and may have stage fright.

A record crowd is on hand for the game despite the weather conditions and hundreds of fans were at the park box office early to obtain their admissions.

A desperate battle is certain because a loss of to-day's game for the Cubs means that the Athletics will own the pennant.

Looking as far ahead as Sunday—in case the Cubs rally and get into the game—the weather man predicts cloudless skies and a warm breeze.

Ticket scalpers are in wrong all round. Their tickets have not been selling as well as they anticipated because bad luck of Cubs' aggregation and because of the bad weather.

Then, too, the national commission is after them and the fans are too sore for words.

Police After Scalpers.

A movement has been started to make ticket scalping a criminal offence, as it is with regard to railroad or street car ticket scalping. The calling off of the game yesterday upset the dope on the game, and fans to-day are up in the air as to what will do with the teams.

Brown is considered by most every one as the logical man to pitch the game. He is a good clutch pitcher, and in most cases can be relied upon.

The Cub supporters point to the fact that the Pirates had the Boston Americans on the run, 3 to 1, when the two met for the championship, and despite the big handicap they were playing under the Boston outfit came back strong in the closing games and brought home the bacon. While few dare to express it, many are thinking that the outcome of the present world's series will be a similar one.

The Cubs played the worst baseball they have played all season during the three games with the Athletics, and on top of this they were minus the services of Johnny Evers, their brilliant second baseman, who is said by many to be the brains of the outfit.

Chance looks for a victory to-day. The Cubs have benefited by the day's layoff and go into the game this afternoon determined to win at any cost. Nobody is more disappointed at the poor showing of the Cubs than the players themselves, and they will work their heads off to land a win this afternoon.

Every man on the team realizes that it is the last chance. The game to-day is the deciding one of the series. If the Athletics make it four straight, as several persons predict, then the championship banner will flont in Shibe Park, Philadelphia, next season. But if the Cubs make a win it will encourage them to increase their efforts to land the remaining games.

BALLOON FALLS IN SUPERIOR

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Cortlandt Field Bishop, president of the Aero Club of America, has practically given up hope for the occupants of the American balloon America II. and the German balloon Duesseldorf II., the two missing entrants in the international race. At noon to-day the balloons which left St. Louis Monday had been in the air more than 117 hours. Mr. Bishop said to-day:

"I am greatly fear that the occupants of the two missing balloons have perished in the Great Lakes. Otherwise we would have heard from them."

The Swiss balloon Azzuca, one of the entrants in the international race for the international cup, was lost in Lake Superior more than three days ago, according to a dispatch received by the Aero Club of America at its headquarters to-day. Captain Emil Messner, the pilot, and his aide, M. Leon Girandau, reported in a message that they escaped death by swimming.

The dispatch telling of the safety of the two aeronauts in the Swiss balloon Azzuca come from Biscotasing, a town in the Algoma district of Ontario.

The telegram from Messner, though it contains but meagre information, tells enough to show that the two men had a thrilling escape from death after they dropped into the lake. They were forced to swim ashore and were then lost for three days in the woods of Algoma Territory and suffered frightful hardships from cold and exposure.

Three Days Lost in Woods.

As the telegram was sent from Biscotasing, it is supposed the two men finally found shelter there. The message contained no word of Alan R. Hawley and Augustus Post, who are missing in the American. There is still a faint hope yet to be accounted for, the Dusseldorf II., representing Germany. Its occupants are Lieutenant Hans Gerlicke and Sussex P. Perkins.

Under special orders from the Canadian Government an active search was begun Monday for the missing balloonists. Troops still aid in the most remarkable search ever instituted. Hundreds of Canadians, pressed into service through purely humane motives, are already scouring the wilderness for traces of the three balloons that are still missing. The whole of the Canadian mounted police force within a radius of a hundred miles is engaged in the search for the missing pilots and their aides.

Troops Out in Search.

Lieutenant Governor Gibson of Ontario held a long consultation with Premier Whitney to-day regarding the search.

Snow storms are raging over Canada and it is believed that the balloonists may have been caught in one of these storms and carried beyond all reckoning, or may have been buried into one of the Great Lakes, where they perished.

Lieutenant-Governor Gibson has already communicated with Sir James Whitney, the premier, who agreed to notify the chief constables and forest rangers to keep a sharp lookout.

The Lieutenant-Governor, however, expressed the opinion that all the Ontario Government could do to locate the aeronauts must necessarily be confined to the wilderness of the northern part of the country.

Revenue Cutters Called Out.

The Aero Club has called upon General Frank Allen, chief of the United States Signal corps at Washington, D. C., to have the revenue cutters patrolling the Great Lakes look for the wreckage in Lake Huron. Steamship companies which have vessels plying Lake Huron and Georgian Bay have been requested to join in the search. The Ontario Government, through its Lieutenant-Governor, J. M. Gibson, advised the club that its services would be of little use in the search for the missing men. The Hudson Bay Company also has replied favorably to the request.

The Duesseldorf II. was piloted by Lieutenant Gerlicke of Berlin, with Sussex P. Perkins of Boston, as aide. Neither was familiar with Canada, and if they were carried away by the severe storms it is feared they were lost in the Georgian Bay. This stretch of water contains more than 30,000 islands, and the aeronauts might perish before relief arrived.

MAY NAME KENYON TO SUCCEED DOLLIVER

DES MOINES, Ia., Oct. 22.—There is an unconfirmed rumor among politicians today that W. S. Kenyon of Fort Dodge, who directed the Meat Trust indictments in Chicago, will be named to succeed the late Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver. The report is the more credited from the fact that Mr. Kenyon has always been a close friend of Senator Dolliver. Mr. Kenyon, who is a Progressive, was appointed to a position in the Department of Justice by President Taft. He is an attorney for the Illinois Central Railroad.

FIFTY DROWNED IN SHIPWRECK

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Oct. 22.—Fifty passengers and sailors were drowned when the British steamship Wally was wrecked near the lighthouse at Arandies, of Para. The vessel is a total loss. Some of the passengers and sailors were rescued, but most were lost.

The British steamer Wally was built in 1883 at Sunderland, England, by the English Shipbuilding Company. She was equipped with a single screw and was put in the Atlantic trade lanling from London by the firm of modern construction and built for the Gordon Steam Shipping Company. The death list may go to 100. Latest advices say fifty of the passengers were drowned when the ship foundered and in addition to those many of the crew of fifty went down. The exact number of the crew which perished is not yet known.

Many of the passengers were substantial English tradesmen.

The Wally was lost through the breaking of the steering gear. The crew was getting ready to lower the life boats when the ship struck a submerged reef with terrific force. She sank instantly. Two or three of the life boats which had been loosed in their davits floated off and several of the passengers managed to crawl into them and make their way to Arrecafes Lighthouse.

The Wally plied between England and South American ports.

NEARLY RUNS DOWN CRAFT IN NARROWS

The Hamburg-American liner Bethania from Hamburg on entering the Narrows to-day missed running the fishing schooner Nellie Franklin by the narrow margin of two yards. The Franklin was at anchor in the Narrows.

All sails on the Franklin were set and the pilot of the Bethania thought the schooner was underway. He did not discover his mistake till almost on the little schooner.

OLDFIELD RACE WITH JOHNSON PUT IVER

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—The automobile race between Barney Oldfield, the speed king, and Champion Jack Johnson, pugilist, was cancelled to-day. This was owing to a break in Johnson's car. The race would probably have been run in any way as rain had spoiled the Shoot-head Bay track for racing purposes.

CRIPPEN DOOMED TO DEATH

LONDON, Oct. 22.—Dr. H. H. Crippen was found guilty this afternoon of the murder of his wife, Belle Elmore Crippen, and sentenced to death by hanging in Old Bailey Court. The jury was out twenty-nine minutes.

The charge of Lord Chief Justice Alverstone to the jury had apparently favored the prisoner and the verdict came as a surprise. Crippen bore up stoically. The counsel for the American gave notice of an appeal that will stay execution.

Ethel LeNeve on Trial Tuesday.

Miss Ethel Clair LeNeve, for whose love Crippen put his wife out of the way, will be placed on trial on Tuesday charged with being an accessory after the fact. The trial established a new record in English criminal procedure. It lasted but five days.

The justice had said that no doubt must exist in the minds of the jurors over the penalty of the remains found in the cellar of Crippen's home. The verdict showed that no such doubt had existed.

The charge to the jury was delivered immediately after the crown's prosecutor, Richard Muir, had summed up for the prosecution in which Crippen was scathingly denounced.

The chief part of the charge aimed against Crippen was in relation to his misrepresentations made to explain Mrs. Crippen's absence.

Letter of Explanation.

"This prisoner's explanation is misrepresentation extended over a period of six months. Was that possible except with the knowledge that she was dead?" said Justice Alverstone.

"If Belle Elmore had been alive, it would have been an extremely mean thing on her part not to communicate with her husband, knowing his predicament and the public feeling about him," said the judge.

The duke for Crippen's execution was set for either November 14 or 15. It is expected that the appeal will not have been passed by that time.

In passing sentence Justice Alverstone asked Crippen if there was any reason why sentence should be passed upon him. Crippen replied calmly:

"I still protest my innocence."

"Stanley Harvey Crippen," continued the court, "you have been convicted upon evidence which could leave no doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that you cruelly poisoned your wife, then mutilated her body. I advise you to entertain no hope of escaping the consequences of your crime.

"I implore you to make peace with Almighty God."

Dazed as He Leaves Court.

Crippen seemed suddenly to realize his predicament when the verdict in the court room and seemed dazed as he was escorted out by warders.

Handsomely gowned women in the court room took their accustomed places to-day to witness the closing scenes, but there were many new faces among them. Twelve extra police men promenaded.

As Muir opened his address Crippen leaned back in his chair with his hands folded in his lap and gazed idly about him. He seemed highly pleased at the progress of his case although as the prosecutor began to unfold the exploits he found himself in his cruel and grew visibly ill at ease.

The jurors divided their attention between Muir and the accused man, but the eyes of the regiment of femininity were for Crippen and no other.

Muir painted a graphic picture, and as he asked that a verdict of guilty be rendered the prisoner blanched.

RECIPROCITY LAW SOUGHT BY TAFT

WASHINGTON, Oct. 22.—That the president will ask Congress at the session beginning next December to pass a bill definitely authorizing reciprocity with Canada is virtually certain as a result of the recent conference held at the home of Secretary Knox. Henry M. Hoyt, counselor of the State Department, and Charles M. Pepper of the Bureau of Trade Relations President Taft will probably make his project one of the leading features of his message. If the necessary authorization for becoming this government will establish a trade treaty with Canada, and Canada will do likewise here in Washington.

LAWSON BETS ON FOSS ONLY AS A BROKER

Thomas W. Lawson issued a statement to-day denying he had put $5,000 even that Eugene N. Foss would be elected governor. The news agency which published the story said: "The bet is regarded as equivalent from the fact that Mr. Lawson is known to be a staunch supporter of Governor Draper."

Mr. Lawson made the following statement in reply:

"I desire to deny the accuracy of the story that I have bet $5000 on Foss for governor of Massachusetts. As is well known, I am opposed to all forms of betting. The bet referred to was for a client. I have, for thousands more of dollars at the same terms. The curse of the stock business is that a broker often acts against his own feelings. I am a life long and a staunch Republican and am this year—nevertheless, if any of my clients feel themselves the yellow where they can cash in their feelings."

RUN OVER BY AUTO, ESCAPES UNHURT

Rose E. Stack, a twelve-year-old Everett girl, after being run over by a touring car with three passengers in it, in Malden, jumped to her feet, refused assistance and rode home in a street car, apparently little the worse for the accident. She is a pupil in the Cheverus Parochial School in Malden, and was crossing Main street at the junction of Charles when in jumping out of the way of a horse she ran directly in front of the automobile.

WOMAN PASTOR TO HONOR MRS. HOWE

"A Tribute of Appreciation to Mrs. Howe" will be given by Miss Florence Kollock Crooker in the Roslindale Universalist Church at to-morrow's morning service. It was through Mrs. Howe's interest that the Women's Ministerial Conference was recently revitalized, with Mrs. Howe, who heard the first call in 1873, as president.

WOMAN STRANGLED; MAN UNDER ARREST

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Anna Weinstock, a pretty woman of thirty, was found strangled to death to-day in the bedroom of her home in Williamsburg and the police after an investigation arrested Paul Christopher of the same address. The woman's body was covered with bruises and her face was terribly badly beaten before she was strangled.

CUBAN REVENUE BOAT SINKS; 20 DIE

HAVANA, Oct. 22.—The Cuban revenue cutter Cespedes was sunk in the port of Cane, and all her crew of twenty-two including the captain, were drowned or perished, according to a report from Cape San Antonio to-day.

POLICEMAN'S COAT BURNED OFF IN RESCUE

In rescuing Mary Fowler from being burned to death in a fire that consumed her best while she slept in her room at No. 47 Main street, Charlestown, Patrolman Thomas McTiernev of the City Square station early to-day lost both his helmet and his coat. The latter garment was burned from his back while he was carrying the woman from the street.

Passing along his beat, Patrolman McTiernev noticed smoke issuing from Miss Fowler's room. He broke in the door with the butt of his revolver and with his coat and helmet burned in the flames.

The policeman said he thought the bed had caught fire from cigarettes.

STRUCK BY TRAIN; TWO MEN INJURED

Daniel McDevitt and Michael Dockts of Prescott street, Dorchester, had a remarkable escape from death when the wagon on which they were seated was struck by an inbound train at the New Haven crossing on Prescott street, and one of the pair of horses attached to the wagon was decapitated, this morning.

Dockts was hurled twenty feet and was bruised by landing in a sand bank, while McDevitt received a severe shaking up. Traffic was held up twenty minutes while the dead horse was being dragged from beneath the wheels of the train.

Hollingshead, a North Reading street car conductor, September 26, by the finding of Judge Sears, who presided over the inquest at Salem to-day. DETROIT "30" FIRST AUTO IN TRUCK RACE

When W. J. Done drove his Warren-Detroit "30" over the finish at College Farms bridge this afternoon he captured the laurels for the first car to reach home on the windup of the BOSTON AMERICAN'S reliability run for commercial trucks to Newburyport and return. The run began yesterday morning when the cars were sent away by Mayor Fitzgerald. The last half of the journey of 120 miles was started this morning from Newburyport.

Done's car was numbered 11 in the entries, entered by the Essex Automobile Company. The package-carrying motor made a perfect score at all controls along the route, going and coming, and reached College Farms ahead of all other cars. Done took first honors in Class A, of commercial vehicles of 1,000 pounds capacity and less. He crossed the finishing line at 12:16 this afternoon.

Reliance Car Second.

The second car to sweep over the line was No. 44, driven by S. R. Chapman, with Ralph S. Taylor aboard as observer. This was a Reliance car, entered by the Reliance Motor Truck Company, and finished at 12:20, taking second honors in class A.

Car No. 3 is the entry list finished third at 12:28, and car No. 47 some third a minute later at 12:29. Like the first two, No. 3 is in class A, is a Hart-Kraft car, entered by C. A. & H. J. Hildich. H. J. Hildich was at the wheel and Louis Hallett was the observer.

The fourth car to cross the finish, No. 47, took the honors in the private owner division. The truck was entered by the Trent Hardware Co., being an I. H. C. machine, driven by L. H. Dixon and with C. J. Tuley as the observer aboard. The motor has a capacity of 800 pounds.

The cars had fine roads on the return. Leaving Lynn, they passed through Saugus, Cliftondale, Malden, Medford, Somerville, Cambridge, to Cottage Farms. The only construction was found on Pleasant street, Malden, where the car tracks are torn up.

E. D. Gilmore was timer at the finish. The cars as they finished were filled with gasolene and oil, and then taken to the city scales in Haymarket square to be weighed, to verify the initial weights of loads taken on the trip.

Thousands See Racers.

The committee announced that in awarding the trophies, a great deal will depend upon the cost per ton per mile for all and gasolene.

At Lynn to-day thousands of persons viewed the progress of the run. Car No. 11, the Warren-Detroit entry, was the first to reach Lynn, some twenty minutes ahead of its schedule, and the others came along to the registering point at Lynn Common to the same order in which they had left West Gloucester. The Mott car, in Class A, known as No. 20, was forced to retire when a sheet distance out of Gloucester, one of the springs being smashed out altogether.

Manchester, Beverly Farms, Pride's Crossing and Salem were passed through en route and the roads were encountered. Charles Jeffrey, driver of the Thomas six-cylinder 1911 model, used by the newspaper men, did magnificent work in keeping them in touch with all the contestants, and the C. M. P. conferred over meeting the route, performed to the satisfaction of all.

Announce Details Tuesday.

The arrival of Nos 19 and 18 wound up the cars in Class A. No. 19 drove over the finish at 12:29, two minutes late, for which it was docked four points. Car 18 finished on time at 12:32.

No. 10 is a Metz, driven by D. H. Marley. No. 12 is also a Metz, driven by John McGuan.

The first car in Class B to finish was No. 6, an Atterbury car, entered by the White Robinson Company, driven by V. Hundlan. This truck came over the line at 12:50, fourteen minutes ahead of time.

The second car in Class B to finish was No. 2.

The official complete list of winners will be announced Tuesday.

COUNCIL REFUSES ELEVATED'S PLEA

Called to special session by the Mayor for the purpose of taking action on the Boston Elevated Railway Company's petition for the right to carry freight, express and baggage over all its lines in this city, the City Council voted to dismiss the petition without prejudice, on the ground the company had not given the City Council sufficient details on which to base intelligent action.

TOD SHRIVER BADLY HURT IN AVIATOR MEET

INTERNATIONAL AVIATION FIELD, Belmont Park, N. Y., Oct. 22.—An American is the first victim of the second international aviation meet. Tod Shriver, a young flyer, was seriously injured when he lost control of his machine seventy-five feet above earth during an early morning flight. Shriver managed to take the aeroplane fifty feet towards the earth when his motor went wrong at the "graveyard turn" of the course. Then it turned turtle and he was hurled to the ground. The machine was wrecked.

Shriver was picked up unconscious and carried to the hospital. He was unconscious when he was among the first of the children to be given preliminary flying.

Shriver was rushed instantly on his car shot up, for a bonus was pending and many of the foreigners were ignorant of the Long Island wind currents.

Shriver shot his machine up to nearly 100 feet and started around the course. As he neared the "graveyard" turn those below could see that things were going wrong. The machine began to bob like a cork as first one motor and then the other began to sputter. The air currents caught the machine and carried it about.

Ready for 75,000 People.

Shriver made desperate efforts to keep the machine on an even keel. Suddenly it shot like a stone and when twenty-five feet above ground suddenly turned over.

Those who looked on rushed out and dragged Shriver from the wreckage of his machine. He had only just recovered from a recent fall and abandoned his craft this morning to make the flight.

The sharp explosion of motors and the loud detonations of propellers broke the echos of Belmont Park, after the night's intense gale way to streaky dawn today and it was announced that the preliminaries for the great international aviation tournament which opens this afternoon were on.

Long Gash in Head.

At the Nassau Hospital an examination showed that Shriver had sustained no internal injuries. There was a long gash on his head, however, and his face was badly cut and bruised when he reached the hospital. He was bandaged up and returned to the aviation field, despite the protests of the surgeons, who insisted that he remain in the hospital for several days. He left the hospital just this machine was ready to be taken to the field to be in readiness for the meet's opening.

While the surgeons stood near surrounding Shriver's machine, the unexpected appeared on the horizon and a few minutes afterward the aviator was in the air and safely on the field. The machine was a Curtiss biplane, with Baldwin in the seat. He had used the trip from Mineola, flying a distance of seventy miles in as many minutes.

edge to cut use in order to carry out his dark designs.

Crippen was pictured as an artist hard at work in a dark, gloomy cellar as his disturbing room—after he had administered a powerful drug to his wife and victim.

Questioned About Drug.

The scene was even more dramatic than on Friday, when Crippen sat through four hours of the most bitter cross-examination in any of the great assaults of English criminal jurisprudence.

The vital point in the case before the reopening on of the prosecution was a powerful link in the chain of defense. Crippen had taken the stand for re-direct examination to explain Lord Chief Justice Alverstone's charge on some points of doubt in his own mind.

You testified yesterday that hyoscin was used as a remedy in cases of nerve disorder," said Lord Chief Justice Alverstone. "Can you tell me how and where you learned to administer this dangerous and powerful drug."

The witness, still haggard and carefully dressed and wearing a stick-up collar and black tie, said that it nearly choked him, turned in the witness chair.

"I learned the use of hyoscin from a medical work which is now in the hands of my counsel, Mr. Alfred Tobin," said Crippen.

Point for Defence.

"Let me see the book," said the Judge. It was duly handed to him, but before opening it he leaned forward and questioned the American further.

"Is it manufactured through the south or in tropical climates?" asked he.

"In both ways, my lord," replied the witness.

The Judge then opened the book at a page and studied the volume carefully for a few minutes.

Soon after the recess, the Lord Chief Justice said: "It is established through the medical authorities mostly that what you say is correct."

Crippen could scarcely conceal his elation as he took his seat, and his counsel were equally jubilant. It was thought that the point brought out by the court was one of the strongest in favor of the fugitive.

The main thread of the evidence continued to be unfavorable to Crippen, who asserted his innocence of murder, although he admitted that he lied a number of times to officers who arrested him on the charge of murder.

Cites Medical Evidence.

We have shown the motive for the crime, Crippen's motive was to establish closer relations with Ethel LeNeve. Perhaps he did not intend to marry her, but that is not to his credit.

The prosecution has shown beyond a reasonable doubt that the remains found in the cellar at No 39a Hilldrop Crescent, North London—the home of this prisoner—were those of Belle Elmore Crippen.

The medical evidence that the part upon the piece of human flesh introduced before the court was a scar, is indisputable and

That is another link against Crippen, for Crippen himself admitted that Belle had undergone an operation for the removal of a piece of flesh was taken from just portion of the human body. The jury decided that this would have been made in such an operation.

As the arraignment continued the prisoner directing at times his usually intelligent face, Crippen has maintained that he was in the criminal periods of the trial.

At times he seemed to realize the better to hear and took almost a silver cane into his mouth. Throughout the court room crowd maintained a death-like stillness, broken only by the calling of witnesses and the constant shuffling of feet.

Crippen's self-possession was remarkable, and when Mr. Miller said he "can Miller crossed the ocean to deny this and protect his good name."

Letter to "Brown Eyes."

Referring to Crippen's reckless accusation against the Chicago man, Prosecutor Muir exclaimed:

"If Miller were guilty would he have addressed on the stand writing to 'Brown Eyes,' a married woman?"

Muir had asserted that she had not been for Mrs. Crippen in his letters to her was "Brown Eyes," and that he knew he had not seen her for several years.

"Was not Belle Crippen could have been buried in the cellar, and not only together with his cunning and his medical knowledge could he have carved the body? What became of Belle Elmore Crippen if she did not meet her death at the hands of this man?"

After one disappeared, following the parade given on the night of February 1, she was never heard of again nor has she been seen by a friend or relative. Crippen suggested that she had gone to America, but would she have started on a trip of such magnitude without telling her friends what she were at the time?"

Escape from England.

Crippen's escape from England with his accomplice, Ethel LeNeve, disguised as a boy, the dramatic across the ocean by Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard, and the capture of the fugitives in the mid-ocean all made a chapter in international history that will be remembered for many little months.

Nothing in history, dealing with crimes and the pursuit of criminals, equaled the sensational story that was advertising the trial.

He left England after Crippen and Miss LeNeve had sailed from Antwerp for Canada, but he was on a speedy liner, and both were under close surveillance. The inspector linked with the ship's officers and the fugitives were seen while they were on the high seas, and was informed before he landed that Crippen's identity had been identified.

The inspector's ship, the Montrose, passed the Montrose, aboard which was his quarry. He landed at Father Point, Quebec, and put out in a special boat, seized the aids of the Montrose and put the doctor and Miss LeNeve under arrest aboard ship.

Thousands Clamor for Seats.

This thrilling chase across the seas, along with the mystery of the finding of the dead body of Belle Elmore buried in the basement of the Crippen house at No. 39 Hilldrop Crescent, North London, started the London appetite for the ghoulish trial. Over five thousand applications were made for seats in the trial room of Old Bailey. The room only seats about one hundred and fifty people, and about one-half of these seats were taken by representatives of the press, counsel, witnesses.

BOSTON GIRL DISAPPEARS IN CHICAGO

CHICAGO, Oct. 22.—Additional interest was added today to the search for Violet Dale or Blackmore, said to be a daughter of a wealthy Boston merchant, who mysteriously disappeared from Chicago several days ago and for whom the police have been searching.

The girl, it was found, spent six weeks here with William H. Tyler, forty-two years old. She addressed a farewell letter to Tyler, in which she professed undying love and declared she believed him to be the best of men. A verse of poetry expressed her sentiments. It read:

Deep in my heart like a pearl in the sea
Unknown by the world, as we live for thee;
Leaves may wither; flowers may die,
Friends may forget, but never will I.

The letter said she had awakened love's young dream and realized what she was doing. It says she is only sixteen years old and asks Tyler to forgive her for being weak. She declares she is not worthy of his love and would go away. Tyler was arrested and is being held pending an investigation.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 200,000 more than its next highest competitor and 75,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

HUNTED MAN, SHELDON, MAY BE WASHBURN

Search is being made in Boston, New York and other eastern cities for Charles D. Sheldon, an "investment agent," who is said to have decamped from Montreal with $1,500,000 belonging to the credulous Canadians who wished to get rich quick.

The missing man is said to have been known in New York as Charles F. Washburn, at one time was a Boston school teacher. Rewards aggregating $18,000 have been offered for the man's apprehension by the Montreal authorities. It is asserted in Montreal that Sheldon, as he was known there, has a round million deposited in banks of New York that he carried from Canada.

F. B. Edwards, a Montreal newspaper man, positively identified a photograph of Charles F. Washburn as that of Charles D. Sheldon, whom he knew and saw many times in Montreal prior to his sudden disappearance two weeks ago.

Sure of Identity, He Says.

"There is no question that Sheldon and Washburn are one and the same person," said Mr. Edwards, who is now in New York. "Information in my possession also makes it entirely probable that Sheldon had operated in this city under the name of Washburn.

"The same deep cleft between the eyes, the lines around the mouth and nose, the scar over the right eye and the peculiar fact that both Washburn and Sheldon invariably wore low collars with a black string tie, left no doubt in the photographs, strengthened my belief as to the identification.

"Washburn disappeared from New York in November, 1908. Sheldon came to Montreal about two years ago. Their methods of getting money from 'suckers' was similar in every detail. The blind pool and endless chain games were worked with equal facility by both. He will make no reputation on the assertion that Washburn is Sheldon and that Sheldon is the greatest embezzler in the history of Canada."

Sunday School Workers.

From Scranton today came a dispatch that a Charles F. Washburn drove that town money-mad with his "investment agent" game in 1907. He disappeared immediately after the bursting of his financial bubble. He was a Sunday school worker in the Second Presbyterian Church and actively identified with the Y. M. C. A. He made money for some of his friends, his business grew rapidly and large amounts were given to him to invest. He sent agents out to get business. One of these induced a widow to invest $1,000 life insurance she had just received. That was the last she saw of her money. She made complaint to the District Attorney and Washburn fled.

Washburn went to New York from Scranton and took up his residence with his wife's brother, Burton W. Gibbs, living at No. 302 Greenwood avenue, Richmond Hill.

Doubled Their Money.

He opened an "investment" office, accepted small accounts from several men and doubled their money in a few days. His fame spread and his business grew. Money hurried to him was doubled and redoubled for the investors.

At first Washburn made daily reports to his clients, but shortly thereafter said he would be unable to do so oftener than once a month. He was frank in saying he bought and sold stocks with money intrusted to him and made no secret of the fact that he depended entirely upon the judgment to increase the investments of his depositors. One man put up $100 and trebled it in three months. Another "invested" $2,000 and in three days took out $5,000, with $2,000 still on deposit to Washburn's books. Hardheaded business men allowed to become customers and many women.

ASKS REMOVAL OF MEMBER OF STATE POLICE

Governor Draper has been asked to remove James J. Grady, a member of the State Police, for alleged conduct unbecoming an officer, by Lawyer James P. Magenis, acting for William H. Flaherty of Winthrop.

Grady arrested Flaherty on the charge that he had set fire to some property in Winthrop owned by his sister, Gertrude M. Flaherty of Somerville. Flaherty had charge of the property and he and his wife, Evelyn M. Flaherty, formerly a Boston school teacher, visited the property the day before it caught fire and oiled the floors of the house.

It is alleged that Grady made up his mind that it was Flaherty who rigged up a candle in such a manner that it would burn low and set fire to the house, and that he was so firm in his conviction that he had arrested the right person that he did not try to get any other person.

The Grand Jury took up the matter and found no bill against Flaherty. Governor Draper has informed Lawyer Magenis that he will take up the matter as soon as possible. Grady lives in Winthrop, where the case caused much comment.

FOSS IS HOST AT DINNER TO STATE LEADERS

FOSS WILL CARRY BOSTON BY 30,000, SAYS FITZGERALD

"I predict—and I want it a matter of record—that Eugene N. Foss will carry Boston by 30,000 and be elected Governor by that figure."—Mayor John F. Fitzgerald at the Quincy House dinner to Boston Democratic leaders.

Democratic district committeemen and candidates for the Legislature from all over the State gathered at the Quincy House this afternoon to meet Congressman Foss, the party candidate for Governor, and to talk over with him in a "get-together" dinner for the Democratic State ticket. They came from varying points between the Temple Hills of the Berkshires and the sand dunes of Cape Cod.

All of those present were from outside Boston. Mr. Foss had his innings with the Boston leaders yesterday. Chairman Frederick J. Macleod of the Democratic State Committee was master of ceremonies for this afternoon's get together.

Mr. Foss delivered a heart to heart talk rather than a campaign speech when he rose to speak after the tables had been cleared. Although the main dining room of the Quincy House was filled to its utmost, the candidate talked merely as he would be a gathering of three or four of his friends around him.

He did not plead with those present to lay their weight in behalf of Democratic candidates and their platform. He took for granted that all of those present were anxious for party victory. He did not even pass on the high spots and by-ways of the State and tell everyone how to get there. There is nothing to it but Democratic victory this year.

Most of the Quincy House banqueters remained in town for the big opening rallies of the campaign held tonight in Fremont Temple and Faneuil Hall. Foss, Cassidy, Vahey, Hamlin, Kelliher, Riley and Draper will speak in the former, Sherman L. Whipple presides at Faneuil Hall.

ROOSEVELT IN CONCORD TALK SCORES MELLEN

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 22.—Colonel Roosevelt, in the first of the three speeches that he made today for Robert P. Bass, candidate for governor and the others of the Republican State ticket, attacked the sincerity of President Mellen of the New Haven Road and warned the people that Mr. Mellen might reverse his decision to keep out of the politics of the State.

The colonel and his party arrived here at 11 o'clock, in a special car attached to the Montreal express. He spoke on a platform erected on the steps of the State capitol. The platform was not big enough and the colonel had to stand up a packing case. It was rain and cold, but more than 2,500 people listened to his speech.

What the Colonel Said.

Colonel Roosevelt got after President Mellen after a brief introduction. He said:

"It has been a real pleasure for me to meet the men who stand upon the Republican platform in New Hampshire. In my own State there are two or three planks in the platform that I would have written differently but I had the only say. But I wish to call your attention to a real difficulty encountered by Mr. Mellen in which he announced that the railroad would withdraw politics in New Hampshire.

"Incidentally that seems to be an admission that the railroad occupied the position from which it has withdrawn. I cannot withdraw from a position unless you have occupied it. President Mellen made this statement with every evidence of sincerity, but this attitude on the part of the railroad is due to the movement which culminated in the nomination of Robert P. Bass.

Invitation to Railroad.

"If the people fail to elect Mr. Bass it will be equivalent to an invitation to the railroad to assume the position that they have abandoned.

"If Mr. Bass is elected the affairs of the State will be administered with a genuine, straightforward attention to the standards of elementary morality.

Colonel Roosevelt then discussed the State platform and said that it had no "weasel words" in it. "Weasel words," said he, "are the kind that suck the meaning out of those that are in front of them."

In concluding his speech Mr. Roosevelt paid his respects to President Mellen after the following fashion:

"You say in your platform that you will use every effort to do away with the pernicious activity of the railroad in politics. Mr. Mellen, actively behind-the-scenes, has said more to your sentiments, but your actions in the past have shown that he will not be one who will decide to reverse his decision."

Short Stop in Lowell.

The Roosevelt party, including Mr. Cassidy, left Boston at 9 o'clock this morning. The train reached the Lowell depot at 10 o'clock, where Roosevelt made a three minute address to about 200 people from the rear of the train.

At Nashua he was met by Governor Quinby and several City officials, and Governor Quinby was chairman of the committee of arrangements. Mayor Conant indorsed Roosevelt for the Presidency on the platform and he received the same indorsement in the Union.

After the speech at the State capitol the party had dinner at the Eagle Hotel. At 2 o'clock they left here for Manchester. From Manchester they went to Nashua, where Colonel Roosevelt delivered his last speech of the day.

CAN ROOSEVELT HAVE FORGOTTEN? ASKS BUTLER AMES

Mr. Roosevelt was President of the United States when Mr. Lodge tried to amend the navy appropriation bill so as to provide for a million and a half dollars for the purchase of the Tremont and Suffolk as colliers from some Boston capitalists, the price having been agreed upon beforehand and which gave a large profit to all concerned. The President upon hearing the facts turned from Mr. Lodge.

I do not understand how the ex President could have forgotten this episode, nor can I understand, if he remembered it, how he could consistently ask the people of Massachusetts to return Senator Lodge after his statements throughout the West that personal friendship or party loyalty or party affiliation should not protect one who abused his office or betrayed the public trust.—Congressman Butler Ames.

LODGE ANSWERS FOSS' CHARGES AT A LUNCHEON

Republican activity which manifested itself last night at the Arena, where the other speaker was former President Roosevelt, centered today in the luncheon given by the Republican State Committee, to the candidates on the state ticket, at Hotel Somerset.

The feature of the repast was the speech of Senator Lodge, in which he replied to the accusation made against him by Congressman Eugene N. Foss, to the effect that he (Lodge) and his son-in-law, Augustus P. Gardner, had done more than any other person to corrupt the voters of Massachusetts by a lavish expenditure of money.

The leaders of the party began to reach the hotel shortly after the noon hour. They chatted about last night's meeting and discussed the chances in the State, one of the things they talked about was as to whether they thought the visit of Roosevelt and his speech would serve to help the Republican situation any in Massachusetts.

Most of the leaders were rather guarded in their expressions about this, but were quite free in their predictions. Of course, they said things were rosy and that Roosevelt helped to whoop 'er up.

The speakers at the dinner, besides Senator Lodge, were Governor Draper and Lieutenant Governor Bruningham. There were about fifty at the dinner.

The feeling of those gathered seemed to be that the day would carry the State Ticket and would have to hustle from now until election.

Rallies in Watertown Town Hall and Faneuil Hall, Boston, are on the Republican program for to-night. Lodge, Draper, Frothingham, Wilder and Bayley are the principal speakers.

By E. V. B. PARKE

Harvard's gridiron machine will be put to a decisive test and will meet its first formidable opponent of the season when they meet the strong eleven of Brown University at Cambridge this afternoon. Harvard and Brown have a game which will be hotly contested from start to finish, and will be won only after the hardest of work.

Harvard's eleven this season is not by a decisive margin, and will not be a decisive one, but it is a well-balanced team and feels confident of emerging victorious from the struggle with a total of at least three touchdowns to the good. Such a score is not impossible, but it is not probable.

Harvard will present her strongest array of linemen all of the regular men with the exception of Withington, who is badly injured, and will be in readiness for the battle. Lewis and Smith, Harvard's two pair of ends, will be on hand to receive punts and forward passes, and they will be particularly valuable in this respect, as Brown's backfield which is faster than any which Harvard has met this season.

The Harvard backfield will have the services of the regular combination, Mackay, Wendell, Hall and Wilson, the latter of whom takes the former's place. He has developed rapidly in the last few weeks, and will be able to do himself justice. Wendell, Hall and Wilson will start at the game, and Corbett will be in readiness to go in at any moment. Wendell played a fine game against Williams, and is entirely capable of holding down his position. Hall is a hard and consistent player, and Wilson is a sensational performer, and is capable of making a touchdown at any time he gets the ball.

Harvard's Crack Backfield.

Coaches Wendell and Fraser are stirred to enthusiasm by the backfield, and make a strong statement when they say that it is unbeatable. Corbett takes the place vacated by the unfortunate Withington, and will undoubtedly start. Corbett has shown himself capable of holding down the position, and is considered a valuable man. He is a hard and consistent player, and Wilson is a sensational performer, and is capable of making a touchdown at any time he gets the ball.

Hard Battle For Crimson.

The Brown line averages ten pounds to the man more than Harvard's, while the backfield is not quite as heavy, but possesses greater weight than the Crimson. Harvard has the edge on Brown in experience, but Brown has had a hard season, and has been forced to play harder football than Harvard has met with this year. Brown's defeat by Pennsylvania last Saturday, when they played the Quakers to a standstill for the first half, is a case in point.

Brown will have her hands full, however, in holding through the Crimson forwards, while this year are more than a match for the Brown line, and will be able to open up a good game. In the backfield Brown has the edge on Harvard, but Harvard has the advantage in the line. There will be a sharp, fast struggle between these two teams, which will be worth going many miles to see.

Brown's ends do not seem to be up to the usual standard, and Captain Rand-dell did his Saturday. Corbett and Grandstein will be able to do to-day—unless Brown wings for long gains. This was the way Hammell won the game for Pennsylvania. McKay is an extremely good punter, and will keep both Corbett and Wendell hustling to prevent Harvard losing ground on exchanges of punts.

Withington May Not Play.

There is a strong possibility that Captain Withington may not play to-day. He injured his leg slightly in the Amherst game Wednesday, and while the injury is not serious, the coaches do not feel that the captain will risk their team and himself by allowing him to play. The loss to Harvard will be severe, as Withington is a player who can be depended upon to put up a hard game and also make the Brown end of the kicking interesting.

Brown starts out in a very scrappy mood, and Harvard, and the past few years has pushed Harvard to her utmost limit. As has been said, Brown expects a hard fight, but also a clean and decisive victory, and she is out to get it.

Brown's scrub and substitutes have worked hard during the week, and while they will not be seen, but today, they will be in some of the collegiate's principles of the game.

Coach Haughton has left on the field, filling fill with an air of confidence. The men came out absolutely fast two weeks before the game, and for the past few days is kicking the ball about, trying out forward passes, and later will signals. The varsity and the subs run through signals for fifteen minutes.

A new formation on the kick-off was used by both teams, who lined up to receive separately. Captain Withington kicking off to the subs, while Coach Leary did the kicking to the varsity. It will be interesting to see how this new formation works, should it be tried out in the game with Brown to-day, for there seems to be great possibilities in it.

"Ted" Back on Job.

Ted Frothingham, the speedy safety and drop kicker of the team, who has been out of the game for some time with an injured knee, was out on tape, and while he did not run through signals he did some good dropkicking from distances twenty forty yards from the goal, and will be a great addition to the team, especially for scoring by kicking when he gets back into form, and the coaches are anxious to have him back with the team. Lewis, the end, who by his good work ousted Fetton from the left wing position, also stayed out after the others had gone to the Locker Building and practiced drop kicking from the limited line distance to thirty yards from the goal.

Captain Withington spent quite a while after the regular practice kicking goals. Potter, the quarterback, holding the ball. He made many successful attempts from different angles, and seems to be getting back his old form in this phase of the game.

BOWDOIN AFTER DUAL RACE WITH WESLEYAN

BRUNSWICK, Me., Oct. 22.—To take place of the annual Bowdoin-Bates championship run of former years, the Bowdoin track management is negotiating with Wesleyan for a dual race here on the morning of November 10, the date of the Bowdoin-Wesleyan football game. The Bowdoin cross-country team, although losing several men through graduation and failure to report, is practicing every day, and promises to be nearly if not quite as strong as the 1909 combination of cross country flyers.

Plans have been drawn for the new quarter-mile running track to replace that which was burned by the conflagration last Spring. The plans call for a straightaway 220 feet wide, with a slight rise to the mile. There will be a sixty-yard straightaway 220 feet wide, which the main track will be eight feet in width. Most of the money needed to build the track was raised by subscription of the students.

WILLIAMS TEAM DROPS YALE, TAKES ON TECH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Oct. 22.—Manager Paul Dunn of the crack Williams college basketball team has completed his schedule for the coming season. It comprises ten games, of which are in Williamstown. Yale is conspicuous by her absence this year, and Rhode Island State is added. Brown, Wesleyan and Dartmouth are retained on the schedule.

The schedule: January 14, Rhode Island State, at Williamstown; 21, Brown at Williamstown; February 4, Massachusetts Tech at Williamstown; 8, Brown at Providence; 11, Wesleyan at Williamstown; 16, Dartmouth at Hanover; 18, Colgate at Williamstown; 25, Tufts at Williamstown; March 1, Wesleyan at Middletown; 4, Dartmouth at Williamstown.

OLDFIELD AND JACK JOHNSON RACE TO-DAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Barney Oldfield, champion automobilist, and Jack Johnson, heavyweight champion pugilist, meet to-day at the Sheepshead Bay race track in their match automobile race, postponed from Thursday on account of rain.

Johnson declares that he will win. "They thought I was kidding when I said I would race and defeat Oldfield, but they did not take notice of me until I put up my money and told them I would have to race me some day, just as public opinion forced Jeffries to fight me. I am going to win or run through the fence trying."

MURPHY AND DOHAN BATTLE TO A DRAW

MANCHESTER, N. H., Oct. 22.—Eddie Murphy of South Boston and Johnny Dohan of New York based a fast fifteen round bout to a draw here before 600 fans to-night. There was little to choose in either man. Dohan had the better of the early rounds, and wrought havoc to Murphy's countenance. Murphy got quick some of his opponent's lead with a slashing left in the first and some hard body blows. There were flurries of savagery in which he backed Dohan into a corner, and a rapid-fire fusillade ensued. Generally Murphy had the better of these exchanges.

OLD-TIME RIVALS TO "PED" IT FOR TITLE

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 22.—More than the ordinary interest is being manifested in the twelve mile, 144 lap walking match between Willard Dean of Auburn and Tom Slater of Oswego which is to be "pedded" off on the Armory track on October 28. England boasts of the champion heel and toe walker of the world, and Slater claims he has defeated him and been defeated by him.

WILLIAMS PLAYER BREAKS COLLARBONE

WILLIAMSTOWN, Oct. 22.—Dayton C. Hervey of Fort Edward, N. Y., a Williams freshman, fractured his collarbone this afternoon in football practice. He was in a scrimmage and sustained the injury by a fall.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Oct. 21.—Yale expects Vanderbilt to be a pretty hard proposition to-day, though she is not overconfident of winning. Just how much of an improvement the week has brought among the players will be shown in the afternoon's struggle.

It was decided to shake a change at quarter this afternoon. "Pop" Corey, who made a fine record in the Princeton game, will help Smith in the substitute and Kernochan, the new quarter, will start the game in his place.

Van Sinderen will go on the end of the line in place of Wister Camp, Jr., and Childs will play guard in place of Rose. Buckingham, the former guard, will play tackle, where Pollitt has been playing. The team will be strengthened very much by these changes.

The coaches gave the players a long talk this morning as a supplementary to the one delivered yesterday afternoon by the men some good advice. Among the speakers were Chocolate Emery, Walter Camp, Rodgers, Hinkey, Tibbott, Louis Mc-Lean, Hollister, Reed, Hall, Bloomer, Corbett and Coy, and these veterans almost equal the number of players who were in attendance. Harry Hall, Harry Hall, Bob Dixon, Fredrick Sanford and Ted Coy.

Vanderbilt's victory over West Point came as the news that Yale may get another fright before the game is over. Middle Tennessee has a history.

Yale is practicing signal drill and skull for football, and a big crowd is scanned for the afternoon's battle.

DOWD COACHES GIRLS' BASKETBALL TEAM

WORCESTER, Oct. 22.—The athletic basketball team of the Worcester High School, one of several teams considered one of the strong girls' teams in the State, has engaged John L. Dowd, a well known professional, to serve as coach of the team this year. The girls will practice in the gymnasium of the Boys' Club, and Miss Ruth Crosby is manager of the team.

WORLD SERIES STORIES.

The baseball season of 1910 officially begins to-day, and in capital style too, for the first game of the world's series will be a corker. The power design is by George Ayton, the inside work, made some superb hits in the Chicago-Detroit series, and Chapman, Reulbach, Moore, Tinker, William Arnold, William Foxen, Joseph Wood, Harry Steinfeldt, Beans and Walter Truesdale are among the players.

KID GOODMAN OUT OF GAME FOR GOOD

Kid Goodman, who was beaten by Knockout Brown at the Armory club, has announced his retirement from the ring. The fans were always sure of seeing a lively bout when the Kid was one of the contestants. He has been twelve years in the game, and has made a world-wide reputation.

Somerville High and Malden High clash in the most important game of the suburban League this afternoon on Broadway field, Somerville.

Malden is a strong favorite, although the Red and Blue backers are not at all discouraged at the team's showing this season. Injuries to the stars being the principal reason why their hardest, as the winners of this game will practically decide the Suburban League championship for the year. Malden and Medford have not been scored upon this season.

Coach White and Hall, both captains, the star halfback of the Somerville eleven, would start the game against Malden, as the latter is the smallest eleven he received in the Cambridge-Latin game and did further this much.

The only change in the Somerville line-up will be the end position, where Fisher and Dennis will play. Holden, under the tutelage of Coach Ingalls, has not been very successful so far this season, having been seriously injured in the game with Dartmouth that the Malden boys have not met as strong eleven as the Red and Blue, and may be a surprise spring on them in the Somerville high game.

Both teams are out for the bell, the Somerville backfield being a trifle heavier than the opponent's, and should not have any trouble in the scrap.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Oct. 22.—The Dartmouth football squad of twenty-eight men has arrived for to-day's game with Williams.

This is the Green's first game of any note held and marks the beginning of the interesting games of her schedule. At the last practice the team showed up in good fast style, and the undergraduates are looking for a big victory.

The forward pass was tried out this week, and the team will undoubtedly use it to a great number of times to-day.

Ryan, Dartmouth's phenomenal kicker, has been practicing and should add a couple of goals from the field. He has been making some pretty shots from the field and Sherwin and Ingersoll have been working hard at punting and either one of them are good for good long ones.

This will be Captain Ryan's initial game of the season, but as his form and will endeavor to make up for lost time by a big performance. He has missed practice in the low-field.

Williams has also been nobbling for him, is too valuable a man to lose so he has been shifted to fullback. He has played that before so will be at home. Bohan, who has held this position, has been relegated to the second team.

TITLE NEVER WON IN FOUR STRAIGHT

CHICAGO, Oct. 22.—A fourth victory for Philadelphia to-day would extinguish the world's series with a world's record, no pennant of the kind having been won in four games so far. The nearest to it was in 1905, when Chicago and Detroit played a tie game, and then Chicago won four straight, ending the series. In 1907 Chicago had excellent meeting defeat. Several other world's series have lasted only five games.

GIANTS WIN SERIES GET $1,110.62 EACH

For winning the series over the Highlanders the Giant players received $23,923.14, divided among 21 men, each receiving $1,110.62. The Highlanders received $15,948.76, divided among 22 players, each receiving 700.26. The total of the players' share of the receipts was $38,871.90. The Giants received 60 per cent, for winning.

FLETCHER GETS ANOTHER JOLT; CUBS QUIT HIM

CHICAGO, Oct. 22.—There is no further hope left for D. A. Fletcher, the Cincinnati promoter who planned a post-season series for Albany.

Following the announcement that Ty Cobb and George Mullin had quit the Detroit Americans Wednesday, Johnny Kling, manager of the Chicago Nationals, declared that there was no chance for a series with Fletcher's team, as practically declare that they would take their same steps as Cobb and Mullin and refuse to put checks to the Cincinnatians.

"Organized baseball looks good enough for me," said Johnny Kling, "and since it has been proven that Fletcher's checks are worthless, I'll be one to quit the game. Brown's Overall and Hofman seconded every word Kling said. This means the death of the outlaw league.

AILEEN WILSON VERY ILL; OUT OF GREAT RACE

The free-for-all pace with the greatest field of the country's crack pacers ever seen over a New England half-mile track, and which has been delayed by the recent storm, is down for decision to-day at Hills Grove.

A wire to the AMERICAN from Providence states that Aileen Wilson, 2:07¼, the little mare owned by Walter Cox, favorite for the pace to-day, was attacked with pneumonia, and that all thought of having her start in the free-for-all had been abandoned, while there are many fears for her safe recovery.

This news will be a sad disappointment to Boston horsemen who would have pinned Johnny Conkler's little black beauty up, down and across the board to-day to beat the famous crack of the twice-around, Major Mallow.

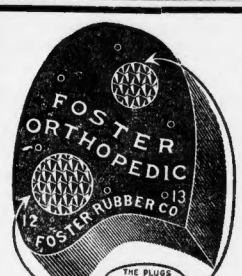
Foster



Orthopedic Rubber Heels

Why do you unconsciously stand first upon one foot, and then upon the other?

Why are your feet and legs so beastly tired when you get home at night?

Why are they almost equally tired when you arise in the morning?

Why do you have the burning sensation on the bottom of your feet?

Why do you have those pains in your heels, in your instep, on the balls of your feet just back of the toes, in your heels, in the calves of your legs, in your thighs, in the region of your spine?

Why are your feet and ankles sometimes, if not always, swelling?

Here's the answer—because the heels on your shoes do not properly support the weight of your body.

It's a positive fact.

The Foster Orthopedic Rubber Heel extends down under the shank of your shoe, thus properly supporting the arch. It makes a firm, even tread. It prevents the arch of the foot from falling and relieves all jar from the nervous system in walking.

These diagrams show the relation of the leg and foot to the bearing point of "ordinary heels" and Foster Orthopedic Heels.

The diagram on right shows weight of body supported on Foster Orthopedic Heels, extending down under shank, to prevent arch from falling or the shoe from running over at side, keeping the foot as Nature intended

Ask Your Shoeman

For Foster Orthopedic Rubber Heels, have them put on your shoes, and your troubles will disappear like magic.

Made in men's and women's sizes, 75 cents per pair put on. By mail, 50 cents per pair. (Give outline of heel.)

LITTLE DETERMINED TO DETHRONE JOHNSON

By Ed. Smith.

If ever a man was in earnest in his campaign to upset a world's fighting champion George Little is in earnest in his efforts to drag Jack Johnson off his perch.

And some points of the Little campaign are extremely funny, despite the fact that George is in such deadly earnest about the whole thing. The desperate character of George's efforts made them all the more amusing.

Sandy Ferguson, late a mixed ale scrapper of Boston and now spoken of as a model of sobriety and athletic virtue, is the vehicle by which Little hopes to ride once more into the affluence and wealth attending the centre of the pugilistic spotlight.

You remember, of course, that Little was Jack Johnson's manager up to a certain stage of the preliminaries leading up to the great Reno scrap.

Little was in right at the reel for Johnson's forfeit and then he a chunk that Jack would win, something his self with most anybody who had any sort of a freak proposition to offer him.

George Little Gets the Hook.

Just when things were getting extremely interesting, Johnson decided that he could do without Little and straightway entered the comely person of the South Sider with what is vulgarly known as "the hook."

Naturally, that peeved Little more than what he name indicates and he began to frame up ways and means for knocking the black off the throne. Sundry and diverse predictions of woe for Jack failed to come true, Little saw at once that the only way to accomplish his end would be to secure a new "hope" and like the black legitimately if such a thing be possible.

Sandy loomed on the horizon. And if you ever cast an eye on this gent you can imagine how big and good he must have looked to the yearning Little.

Immediately an alliance was formed. Little's terms being extremely stiff on the grog proposition. Sandy's lamentable weakness was quickly admitted, condoned and then sidetracked, Sandy promising to be as good that he was threatened with a removal of all traces of his former soused self.

Has Hard Go With Barry.

With Fergy sticking to the straight and narrow and Little preparing him for the road much as would the Hinglings their circus the chief concern then is the immediate future. The story of the battle is old now.

But returning to the Little entourage and circus methods. Remember, don't you, that George used to refer to Johnson as the "big Barnum and Bailey fourring circus?" Well, George hasn't eliminated the idea from under his skin yet.

While in Buffalo recently he started a show printing house out with orders for hundreds of three-sheet posters carrying out his own ideas of the situation. George told me about this when he passed through town Sunday night on his way to New Orleans.

"These posters will be dreams, all right," he said with a great deal of satisfaction. "On one side will be Johnson in a small fighting position with me pointing at him. Under him will be the words: 'There is the man I made champion.' On the other side in a heroic attitude will be Ferguson, a lifesized picture, and underneath his picture I am saying: 'And this is the man I discovered to beat him.' Pretty nifty, eh?

Determined to Get Johnson.

"It doesn't matter to me what it costs, so how long it takes. I am going to get this black fellow for the trick he played me. Then good-bye to his title and his proud position.

"The first time I meet Johnson, I am going to flash $5,000 under his nose, and then go him to fight the big fellow. He doesn't like that sort of stuff, and I know it."

Little further stated that Ferguson could have whipped Jeffries at Reno much easier than did Johnson. He draws his line of argument on the basis of the story of Armstrong one day knocking Jeffries down and all but out in training quarters, while Armstrong was the easiest sort of a victim for Ferguson in their bout.

Little has a picture taken of Jeff on the floor with Armstrong standing over him in a dazed sort of way, the rest of the camp appearing thunderstruck at what has happened.

BIG ORVIE OVERALL WILL QUIT BASEBALL

CHICAGO, Oct. 22.—Orval Overall, who has been one of the star pitchers for several seasons, announced to-day that he had pitched his last big league game.

"I don't mean that I won't work again in this series," said Overall. "I will if Chance asks me to, but I won't be a pitcher on the Cub team or any other club next year.

"The life of a big league pitcher is unsatisfactory at best. If you are good, you get along all right and no one has any complaint to make; but if you are bad, even for a little while, or if your arm goes back on you, you are up against it and you can't help yourself.

"I like baseball and would be glad to play any other position. If someone will try me as an outfielder, a catcher or first baseman, I may decide to stick to the game a while longer."

FARMERS FEAR FOREST FIRES FROM HUNTERS

By DICK CARPENTER.

The farmers of New England are praying for rain. Not because their crops need it, but because they fear forest fires set by careless hunters. Two years ago the same condition existed, but at that time the steps taken were not as stringent as they are to-day.

In Vermont there will be no deer this year because the woods are so dry. Governor John A. Mead has issued a proclamation which closes the woods to hunters from October 23 to October 31.

The game laws in Vermont would normally give the hunters an opportunity to seek deer every day next week. But Governor Mead, acting at the request of hundreds of farmers throughout the State, has by special proclamation closed the season.

His edict bars the hunting of ducks, gray squirrels, rabbits and all other game during the coming week. It is simply an order to the hunters to suspend sport for a week and wait for rain. Incidentally it cuts off the deer season.

Too Warm For Hunters.

The proclamation has met with the approval of the sportsmen in general since it has been too warm to go into the woods and if deer were killed they would be of little value since the meat spoils so quickly in the warm weather.

The season was suspended by Governor Prouty in Vermont two years ago for the same reason. It was later reopened by act of the Legislature. This course will probably be followed this year.

But Vermont is not the only section of the country where the farmers are worried. The farmers out in Hampden and Hampshire counties are not only posting their lands right and left, but they are employing other methods which are making the sportsmen uneasy.

The result has been that the Springfield Fish and Game Association has offered a reward of $50 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of any licensed hunter on the charge of setting fires in the woods.

Blame Fires to Small Boys.

This action is not the result of complaints against licensed hunters. On the other hand the game wardens out in that section of the State say that the fires found are set by almost every one by small boys who are out chestnutting.

The action of the Springfield association is worthy of the good intent of everyone sportsman of the State since the reward is posted in the hope that the game wardens will thereby gain assistance in their efforts to prevent fires and to learn who is responsible for them.

Ali Goffstown, N. H., a bad fire was started on a wood lot owned by Curtiss Richards, a well-known farmer. It is claimed that coon hunters started the fire when they attempted to smoke out a coon.

The fire got beyond their control and two gangs of men were summoned from Goffstown and from the surrounding farms to fight the blaze. The fire burned over about 125 acres before it was stopped.

The Massachusetts Gunners' Association will undoubtedly take a strong stand on the question of careful conduct of their members while in the woods. The Marlboro Gunners' Protective Association has affiliated with the State association, bringing not only 120 new members, but plenty of enthusiasm for the new movement.

SNAP YOUR GAME AND WIN A PRIZE

THE BOSTON AMERICAN will give as a high grade Winchester rifle or shotgun of the latest model, manufactured by the Winchester Arms Company, for the best photograph of live game birds or big game taken before December 15 next.

For the second best picture received a camera will be awarded.

The clearness of the picture and the "action" shown will figure largely in making the awards. The names of the judges who will decide the winners will be printed within a short time.

GAME RECEIPTS IN MAINE BREAK RECORD

BANGOR, Me., Oct. 22.—The game wardens to-day reported that yesterday was the record day of the season for big game receipts, having checked seventy-one deer and seven moose, which brings the tally for the season to 430 deer and twenty-two moose. G. H. Sperry of Boston took home only part of a moose shot near Norcross. G. A. Lapham of Boston came down from Masardis with part of a moose shot in the Squa Pan region, beside two deer. Among the Boston men who took home moose or deer were E. E. Crocker, C. M. Sullivan, W. H. Allen, V. Farnsworth, E. A. Morse, S. Waters and G. W. Clement.

BIRDMEN MAY RACE AUTO MEET WINNER

SAVANNAH, Ga., Oct. 22.—If the sanction of the Automobile Club of America can be secured, an international race between the winner of the Grand Prize automobile contest and as many aeroplanists as wish to enter will be arranged for Grand Prize Week in Savannah.

This matter has been taken up with Chairman Robert Lee Morrell of the contest committee by Secretary Solomon of Savannah. Permission from the contest committee is all that is needed.

If sanction is given Secretary Solomon will immediately enter into negotiations with Grahame-White, Curtiss and other birdmen.

MORAN-KRAMER TO MEET HERE IN 6-DAY RACE

Alec Nelson, manager of the six-day bicycle race that starts a week hence at the Boston Arena, from October 31 to November 5, inclusive, has made a ten strike in securing the signatures of Jimmy Moran and Frank Kramer to a contract.

The two men, easily two of the best riders in the game to-day, should make things interesting for the other clever teams that are entered in the long grind. Moran is regarded as one of the best six day riders ever known and he a wonder when it comes to plugging hour after hour and day after day.

Kramer, for the past nine years, has had the American spirit, enthusiasm and with Moran, the "King of Plugggers," as partner, it would be hard to get together a better team for a six-day race. Kramer, a native of Nth Lisle city, the pride of the bicycle fans of this section a few years ago, has been signed up by the management of the Arena with Jeff Beckwith and Gordon Walker of Australia as his partner.

Wasted Emotions

By DOROTHY DIX

One of the most amusing—and pathetic—of all feminine peculiarities is the distress and prodigal manner in which women waste their emotions.

There isn't a woman in the world who is not the perpetual victim of her hopes and fears, her anxieties and apprehensions, her joys, and her hates, and all because she is so recklessly extravagant of her feelings that she expends as much heart throb over any trivial matter as she would if it were the great crisis of her life. In a word, a woman gets up as much steam if she is summoned a mile into a car as a man would if he were going to risk the total forfeit of his life.

A woman has immense nervous capacity, and it is only when she is a mere mental puff that she doesn't find within a shop full of excuses, reasons and lies used to be passing that vast and holy affair called "women's emotions" that she is not wasting her last ounce of soul and love on us!

A Hat—the Process

She begins by working herself to a frenzy in the matter of having nothing fit to wear, and she finds this excited mental state of hers she suffers agony from imagining that other women are observing her clothes with wearing her old hat. This is followed by a feverish reading of fashion notes as to coming styles. Then she invades a couple of two-by-four shops to decide what she shall get a hat like after a spy sheet or a postage stamp.

Finally, summoning all her courage to her aid, she boldly invades the millinery shop, where she spends hours of acute torture, vibrating between hope and despair, looking for a head covering that will take the years off her age, be suitable to wear to a funeral or a party, dismay the criticism of her friends and attract the envy of her enemies, and whose price will not superinduce fits in her husband.

In the end she emerges temporarily triumphant and uplifted, only to be cast down into the pit of deepest-dyed disappointment when the hat is delivered, for the "Before" and "After Taking" pictures of the patent medicine advertisement are no more unlike than the way a hat looks in a milliner's shop and the way it looks at home.

Her Husband—Another Process

Then comes the war a woman wages with a commonplace matter as her husband's return home of an evening, upon an occasion when he happens to be a little late. He is a big, strapping, able-bodied man, with sufficient intelligence to have built up a good business and to have many other men in his employ. His shrewdness and ability to look out for himself inspire great respect in all who know him. Nevertheless, when his key doesn't click in the lock at his accustomed hour his wife begins to fidget.

In five minutes more she begins to look out of the window. Another five minutes finds her with her nose glued to the window pane and her face getting pale with apprehension. Two minutes more and she is walking the floor. Another ten minutes, and she is wringing her hands. Five minutes later and she has got his life insured on the wire. No answer. Everybody gone.

Imagination's Gambit

Then the storm breaks. "I knew it," she cries, with stony despair. "He has been killed. Run over, by an automobile. Or a train. Or maybe waggy. And I wonder to want beautiful they have taken his poor, mangled form! I must go to him. No, I must stay here, where he can find me when they discover who he was and his address from the papers on his dead body."

"Or maybe he has been lured to some confidence man into a dark alley and given knockout drops and murdered and thrown into the river. I have heard of it just such things happening and John is so careless and unsuspicious. Oh, I hate—begged him NEVER to cause appointment with strange people! Oh, Heavens! what shall I do without my dear, kind husband? And what will become of my poor little, orphaned children? OOOOO!

Safe at Last

"Or maybe he is taking that good looking stenographer of his out to tea at the Knickerbocker. He'll married the against him. She is a cat if there ever was one. No I don't believe any such thing. Her hair that was really that pitiful brown. And she's too old for him, too. Ha! There's one good reason for his being so late and I'll bet it is that. At the Knickerbocker! And she waiting dinner, and everything being ruined, and his poor neglected wife, and the thing he has to do, to say and see in life, dear? Tie up on the couch! It's an hour and get ready. Serve dinner. Ann."

The wife turns off the stream of her emotion. Essentially she is as placid on the surface as millponds, without a ripple to show that she has wasted a ton of apprehension, anxiety, sorrow, grief, misery and suspicion upon a perfectly innocent situation.

Future Stress

As for borrowing trouble it's nothing short of pitiful the amount of suffering that women waste upon things that never happen at all. I once, myself, saw a young mother, basking in an opulence unable in her arms, burst suddenly into passionate weeping.

"What on earth," I cried in alarm, "is the matter?"

"Oh," she replied, "I was just thinking what I should do—how it would break my heart if when my precious little darling grows up she marries some man who gets drunk and beats her!"

But the most heart-breaking of all wasted emotion is the love and faithfulness that women pour out without stint upon perfectly worthless and unworthy men, the breaking of alabaster boxes upon careless and unmoting feet.

One Explanation

For myself, I never know whether a man is most filled with reverence or contempt for them, when I see some noble, great-hearted woman humbly bowing to kiss the hand that scales her, waiting patiently as a dog might, for some careless word or kindness from a man who barely tolerates her or grieving her life out for the husband who has been faithless to her, who has neglected her, and mistreated her, and, finally, perhaps, run off and left her with a houseful of children to support.

Certainly the amount of emotion that women can expend on inadequate causes is one of the inexplicable phenomena of nature. Perhaps, though, the explanation lies in the fact that woman's ability to get thrills out of nothing was given her to cooperate her for the dullness of the ordinary feminine lot, where, if women didn't manufacture their own chiffons of romance and heart throbs they wouldn't have any.

THE NEW "INSIDE-OUTSIDE" GOWN.

Lady Duff-Gordon, the famous fashion creator, describes her newest creation, the "double-decker" gown, which is a skirt which can take off and still be fully dressed. See to-morrow's and heart throbs they wouldn't

Bill Clerk Is Too Sensitive

By KENNETH HARRIS

"OLD HANK down in the shipping room is sore at me," said the bill clerk. "I'm going to make it my business to keep out of his way."

"Sore at you, Johnny?" exclaimed the cashier, with an air of amazement. "Impossible! You must imagine it. It's just your sensitive disposition that makes you think so. He really couldn't harbor any sort of ill feeling against one as innocent and fair."

"Perhaps I did imagine it," said the bill clerk, bodkatly. "No doubt he didn't say what he said about me. It was somebody else with a bald head and a tobacco swelling on his right cheek that called me things and wanted to bust the top of my head open with a nail puller. I'm just mistaken about it, that's all. Only I hope I don't get the habit. It might make me unhappy."

"What did you do to him?" asked the cashier.

"I was just telling him," explained the bill clerk, "it's one of these fellows who can't take a little joke."

"Deficient in the sense of humor, eh?" said the cashier. "Well, it's a sad thing to be born that way, not to be able to tell whether a man's but indulging in a playful disposition when he hits you over the head with a hammer or whether he's trying to hurt you. I'm a little lacking that way myself, though."

Humor and—Humor

"If a dog takes a piece out of the calf of my leg, it doesn't console me at all to be informed by the owner that he was just sportive and hadn't any intention of mutilating me. I'd just about as soon have a vicious horse kick me as a playful one. But why didn't you go up to him in a frank, manly fashion and tell him that you had no intention of hurting his feelings with your barbed wit?"

"I did apologize," answered the bill clerk. "I took what I'd said back, and I supposed it would be all right. I guess that's about all a fellow can do if he thinks he's in the wrong—apologize for it. I don't know what more he wanted."

"If he wants any more than that he's a most unreasonable sort of a person," declared the cashier. "If he didn't shake your hand with tears of emotion stand ing in his eyes he's a cross-grained curmudgeon incapable of understanding a noble and generous spirit. He deserves to have you shun him. It will be a just punishment for him."

"That's right. Start kidding," said the bill clerk. "You're a great kidder, ain't you?"

"I was merely trying to point out Old Hank's want of appreciation," the cashier said. "I might also remark, Johnny, that his attitude is the attitude of the world. Man is only human, and is therefore prone to error, but his fellowmen don't prone to forgive him for erring just because he apologizes.

"If you go around treading on people's corns you may confidently expect a few lofts in the ribs whether you grin and say, 'So sorry!' or not. If you tell husky, short-tempered and violent men that they are liars, and make a practice of it, you can't always appease them by saying that you were only fooling. The waiter who flits a plate of boiling soup down a diner's neck can't get away with it by murmuring, 'Excuse me.'

"If you gleefully rock a boat with the intention of giving its occupants a little pleasurable excitement, there will always be a feeling on the part of the bereaved ones that your expressions of regret were hardly sufficient compensation for the loss they sustained.

"It ought not to be so, of course, but it is, and there you are, and what are you going to do about it? You might yield to a sudden temptation and misappropriate a loan, and be genuinely sorry and feel no false pride in telling the minions of the law that you oughtn't to have done it, but they are likely to insure you for not exceeding thirty days just the same."

An Example

"You don't tell me," said the bill clerk.

"It's absolutely the case," returned the cashier. "Some day, in a new state of society, a person may be able to do idiotic, clumsy or criminal things and escape unpleasant consequences by assuring the sufferers of his sincere penitence, but in the present unhappy condition of things, he has to refrain from doing them or saying them to keep up friendly relations with his fellows. This may seem a little obvious, my son, but you are just sap enough to need the information—if you will pardon my plainness. You know I wouldn't wantonly or unnecessarily hurt you for the world, Johnny."

"You go to the dickens!" said the bill clerk, bodkin. "You set altogether too gay with me, and I want you to take notice that I don't stand for it."

Call of the Sea

By KATHLEEN CONYINGHAM GREENE.

GREY rolling waves, fretted with creamy foam;
Over the bay fishing boats dipping home;
—Trusting to you, safe in your wide embrace,
Mother of All!—
Changing forever, ever the same—your face,
Older than man, new in the ears of all,
So is your call!

Out from the land, out from the renown,
Singing of magic, telling of fair
Call you your sons; swift to your feet are they;
Mother of All!—
Hard is your service, long is your working day,
Yet to their ears, sweetest and best of all
Sounds the call.

Giving no service, we are your servants, too;
Vowed to your praise, bound for our lives to you;
—Surest in your voice, strong is your soothing hand,
Mother of All!—
Knowing through you more than we understand,
Finding in you words for the need of all,
You are the Call!

Married Life First Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

No. 26—THE BABY'S NAME.

SINCE the baby's birth nothing had been said about its name. For weeks before Helen had thought of countless names. She had spent many happy hours dreaming of what she would call her baby—her beautiful, golden-haired, blue-eyed baby!

She had made a list of names and talked them over with Warren. If it were to be a boy, she wanted most of all to call it after its father. But Warren had vigorously protested. One "Warren" in the family, he said, was quite enough; and he believed in giving children individual names of their own, and not those of their parents.

Into had filled a secret hope which Helen had long cherished—that if it should be a little girl, he would insist on calling it after her.

Elimination

But, with their own names eliminated, Helen's fancy hovered uncertainly around many others. Warren was inclined toward the strong, old-fashioned names like John, William, Mary and Elizabeth.

But Helen wanted something more modern, and, as Warren said, more "romantic and novelish." Richard and Winifred headed her list. Warren laughed, and said as long as she didn't insist on Reginald or Geraldine, he wouldn't offer serious objections to anything else.

But now that the baby had come and it was neither blue-eyed nor golden-haired, but was, instead, a very homely, red-faced, bald-headed little girl, Helen had not the heart to talk of names. And she was grateful to Warren for his silence on that subject.

They just called it "baby"—that seemed quite sufficient for the time. They didn't even use the feminine pronoun. "It's crying," or "It's asleep" was what they usually said.

Grandfather Insists

It was Warren's father who first brought up the question of the name. For days Helen had been dreading the time when he would come to see the baby. She begged Warren not to let him come just yet, to put him off on some pretext until she was stronger and the baby a little older.

But one afternoon, wholly unexpectedly, he stopped at Warren's office and insisted on going home with him—said it was quite time he saw "that baby!" Warren was helpless. He did not even have a chance to telephone to Helen.

When they reached the apartment they found her in an old wrapper, her hair in disorder. She had just got the baby to sleep and was sorting over some flannels which had come from the laundry.

Her confusion and embarrassment were painful. She had always disliked and feared her father-in-law—and for him to find her like this!

Grandfather's Advent

"And where is that baby?" he asked in his curt, brusque way.

"It's in the nursery. I've just got it to sleep."

"Well, I must see the baby. That's what I came for. Is this the nursery, in here?" staring toward the door.

"I'm afraid if you wake it up now, it will cry," Helen objected, nervously.

"Oh, all babies must cry some. It's good for them. Oh, here's the little shaver!" he had bended over the crib now.

Only the top of the baby's head and its little red, clenched fists were visible. Helen stood at the other side of the crib, praying that it wouldn't awake. And, in her embarrassment, he deliberately drew the covers from its face.

The Baby Awakens

"Oh, father—you mustn't awaken it!" protested Warren, who was standing behind Helen. "It's so hard for Helen to get it to sleep."

"I'm not going to awaken it, but I can't see it all covered up like that."

But already the baby was awake. It gave one bewildered look up at the unfamiliar face bending over it, and then began to cry—not an ordinary baby whimper, but an angry, protesting scream. It had never been abruptly awakened before, and it was loudly proclaiming its wrath.

With an indignant glance at her father-in-law, Helen took it up and tried to soothe it. But it had never screamed so loudly, its face had never seemed so red nor its mouth so large. Helen was miserably conscious that Mr. Curtis was watching it critically. She tried to shield its face in her arms, but it persisted in wriggling around so it could be plainly seen. It was all she could do to repress her own tears of anger and mortification.

"Martha" Proposed.

"And what are you going to call it?" her father-in-law asked, quite unperturbed, when the baby stopped to catch its breath.

"We haven't talked of that yet," Helen answered, with as much cold dignity as, under the circumstances, she could assume.

"You haven't talked of it yet?" brusquely. "Why, the child is—how old? Four weeks, isn't it?"

"Four weeks and five days."

"Well, it must be named."

named and christened at once. Martha—that's my mother's name. Don't you say that, Warren? after your grandmother Curtis?"

"Why, I—I'll leave that to Helen," Warren answered, much embarrassed.

"I don't think I should like Martha," Helen said, coldly.

"Catherine" Next

"Then how about Catherine? Warren's great aunt was Catherine—Catherine Curtis, and a very fine woman, too. That would be an excellent name. You'd better decide right now on Catherine."

"Mr. Curtis," Helen's voice was icy, "Warren and I would prefer to name our baby ourselves! And now, since you have awakened it, if you will kindly go into the other room, perhaps I can quiet it again. I don't think I can while you are here."

It was the first time any member of Mr. Curtis's family had ever had the courage to speak to him like that. Just what subduing reply he would have made, they never knew, for Warren quickly pushed him on the arm and drew him into the other room.

"Come father," Helen is nervous and unstrung, and it's so hard for her when the baby cries. She really isn't well enough to see anyone yet."

"Well, evidently the child has inherited some of her temper, from the way it screams," Mr. Curtis retorted angrily.

Helen Protests

Warren flushed, but refrained from making any comment. There was nothing to be gained by antagonizing his father. He only wanted to mollify him, to get him off quietly without any further scene. He succeeded at last and hurried back to Helen in the nursery.

She had almost quieted the baby, but her eyes were full of angry, indignant tears.

"Then you mustn't mind father, that's only his way."

"Oh, that's what you always say. But for him to come here at the time and deliberately wake the baby and upset me—"

"Yes, I know," he admitted, soothingly, "it was unpardonable, but try not to think about it any more."

The Point Evaded

It was not until later in the evening that he said, doubtfully:

"I suppose we should name the baby soon."

"Yes, but not now. I'd like to wait a little longer—a few weeks."

She didn't want to explain, even to him, that all the names she had thought of for her beautiful, golden-haired, laughing baby—not for the poor, homely little baby that was now whimpering in her arms. And she wanted to wait until it was a little older, hoping that it would be a little less unattractive.

Perhaps he understood, for he pressed her hand close to his as he said, quietly:

"Very well, dear; we'll wait."

MISS ROSALIND FISH BECOMES THE BRIDE OF JOHN W. CUTLER

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

Today seems to be the day of days for weddings, but unfortunately most of them are out-of-town affairs. That of Miss Rosalind Fish, second daughter of Hamilton Fish of New York, and John W. Cutler, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Cutler of Brookline, was undoubtedly the largest and most brilliant. The ceremony took place at the Fish summer home, Rockmere, garrison-on-the-Hudson.

Mr. Cutler, who was one of the sporting men of his class, Harvard '09, gave his farewell bachelor dinner at the Essex County Club, Manchester, about two weeks ago, when his best man, ushers and a few close friends were among his guests. Among his ushers are: Roger and George Cutler, Louis A. Shaw and Francis Burr, all of Boston; Fulton Cutting, who spent the Summer on the North Shore; E. Merle-Smith Bigelow, E. Morgan Gilbert and H. Keteltas Slade of New York, and most of them classmates, Harvard '09, of the bridegroom.

Among Miss Fish's attendants were: Miss Katherine Tweed, whose summer home is on the North Shore; Miss Edith Denison, a bride of the near future; Miss Eleanor Mortimer, Miss Dagmar Rubner, Miss Florence Rowland, Miss Jessie Thompson, Miss Helen Cosler, Miss Elizabeth Cutting, Miss Janette Alexander and Miss Helena Fish.

Mr. and Mrs. Cutler are to spend the Winter at Beverly Farms.

Another wedding of interest is that at Lexington of Miss Gertrude M. Hall, eldest of Edward T. Harrington, to Dr. Wilmot M. Tyler, son of Daniel G. Tyler of Lexington.

The ceremony took place at 4 p. m., and was performed by the Rev. John M. Wilson of the First Parish Church of Lexington.

James Nowell of Winchester was best man.

Mrs. A. S. Stuart of Boston, sister of the bride, was matron of honor and the bridesmaids were Miss Cora Atherton Hall of Lexington and Miss Elsie Hastings Tyler of Lexington.

The ushers included Roger Clapp of Boston, Frederick B. Taylor of Brookline, William P. Winch of Boston and Alfred S. to be raised.

Eyre of Boston. The bride's gown was a handsome creation of lace with duchesse inserts and her veil was a family heirloom of embroidered lace. Her bouquet was of Aaron Ward roses and valley lilies.

The matron of honor wore a gown of blue voile with brocaded satin cord, and a large blue hat with maribout trimmings. Her bouquet was of violets and valley lilies.

The bridesmaids were gowned alike in gold silk gowns, with gold colored satin coats trimmed with marabout. Their hats were of gold tulle with brown maribout trimmings and their bouquets were of bronze-colored chrysanthemums and Autumn leaves.

After a wedding journey of a month they will reside in Lexington.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Grace Lindberg and George Davis, both of this city.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Cabie of North Scituate were in town the past week to attend the funeral of Miss [illegible].

Mrs. George B. Little, sister of Wallace Pierce and widow of George B. Little, formerly of Brookline, is spending the Winter at the Hotel Puritan.

Miss Sarah Chase, eldest daughter of Mrs. L. Frank Chase of Allen Place, Brookline, is holding a reception and tea in the red parlors of the Hotel Puritan this afternoon from 4:30 until 7.

Mrs. Charles S. Bird and Miss Edith Bird, who have been at Highwood, Lenox, for the Autumn, have returned to their old English-like country home at Walpole. Miss Bird, taking her Endean beagles to Lenox, made the Fall season there most interesting, and it is the opinion of all in the hunting set that the beagles do better work on the Lenox hills than did the English fox hounds, which were maintained for several years by the Berkshire hunt.

TWENTIETH INSTALMENT

A S they hung there almost motionless, but for the slow revolutions of the propeller that kept the head of the ship to the wind, while McAndrew worked feverishly, Jardine felt a sense of utter freedom from care, from all knowledge of reality and the world he had known.

And then, almost before he knew, the speed had been increased once more, and the interrupted journey resumed. Slowly the town rolled its way reluctantly far below. Fort Revere, nothing of them, where the whirr of their engines was possibly hardly audible to the sleepy dwellers who had so little in common with them now.

And now the town was left behind them. Then speed had increased. Hitherto they had travelled at little more than eighteen miles an hour, but now it would seem that McAndrew, as though drunken with excitement or success, was setting the engines out to their full speed. As he had stood by the airman's side in the shadow of the great shed on that earth that seemed so far away that it was like a memory of a year, not of hours, so now Jardine felt the inexplicable communication of his companion's excitement—but in it had been pleasurable, tingling, anticipatory excitement, and now [illegible] drunken with excitement or success, was setting the engines out to their full speed. As he had stood by the airman's side in the shadow of the great shed on that earth that seemed so far away that it was like a memory of a year, not of hours, so now Jardine felt the inexplicable communication of his companion's excitement—but in it had been pleasurable, tingling, anticipatory excitement, and now [illegible] were other influences in it—apprehension, doubt, uncertainty * * * something that was almost fear * * *

But the aeronaut looked forward, looked ahead into the darkness that was cleft not at all by the feeble lights that marked there were dangers in the darkness of which his companion knew nothing, the danger of the air lying in wait for them, in the midst of their path across that track of water, nearer the French coast perhaps than the white line of the cliffs that was England, lurking and gathering the unleashed treacherous air forces waited for the men and machine by which has presumed to set them at defiance.

* * *

As Beatrice went about her duties in the household of Mrs. Harrison she heard her own name called softly, and, looking over the banisters, saw Mlle. Fleury standing midway on the stairs.

"Miss Charters—hush, not a sound! I didn't want Luis to hear me * * * can you come down and speak to me for a moment, I wonder?"

She nodded and went down swiftly.

"What's that they're shouting?" It a trivial voice came sharply, cutting the air as that had followed the hoarse, unintelligible cry of the newsboy that, though it had conveyed no definite information to her, had in some inexplicable way appeared to affect her vitally. "What are they shouting about, Miss Charters?"

He turned to Beatrice with a movement of his shoulders.

"What * * * you are keeping something from me, Mr. Fleury?" she said. "Please, I do not like secrecy. I have hastened here that I might tell you something. I think you ought to know something that * * * supreme intelligence, that * * * may cause you distress and terrible——"

Mlle. Fleury was infinitely more difficult than she had imagined, this thing he had come to do.

"Well * * * just a little unpleasantness. So sit down, Miss Charters, if you can find a chair in this room—and the fellows will see it's all utterly absurd and yet so distinctly uncomfortable——"

Mlle. Fleury, for once, finds check beneath her. Just for the moment the import of the blow was being expected, and fallen at last, seemed to stun her. Her self-control seemed ripping from her, all about her dazed vague, sick shapes of fear.

"Do you mean that——" Her voice trembled into silence; she clasped her hands together feverishly.

Fleury sat down also.

"It won't bear about the bush, Miss Charters," he said. "Jardine has fallen now ridiculously you and I who know him in a peculiar manner shudder at a grave offence. You have heard of the tragedy of his wife's death and disappearance—how or why I don't pretend even to guess, but the police suspect——"

"Him?" Beatrice had risen to her feet, her hands pressed hard to her breast, as if to still its pain. "Oh, it is impossible!"

"Just that; it's nothing in the least to be worried about, Miss Charters. He is perceptibly an ass, but I felt that if you heard rumors of this from some of Lulu's feather-brained friends it might worry you unnecessarily. You see, Dick, in the most absolutely characteristic way—is behaving like an idiot—although a sweet to any one he has disappeared—and if looks bad on the color of a man's hair can weigh in the balance against him at such a moment——"

"Disappeared! Why, he's only down at Marc at his cottage there," she cried, with a sudden hope. "Oh, I am sorry, I apologize. "That's just the point. He's not down at Marc. The very night the police intended to arrest him he disappeared. Three days ago now, and he's not been heard of since."

And as Fleury hesitated once more into the conventional cant of the moment, he stooped, distinct, now utterly and horribly distinct, now——

"Extra Sporting Life Murder Mystery * * * Sensational Development!"

Beatrice started to her feet with a gasping cry.

"There! Again! They're crying it in the streets. Crying it to the streets, and I never knew!"

Before Fleury realized what her movement meant she had stumbled to the window and torn aside the Venetian blind; its rattle drowned the shouts of the boy, intent in his running to readjust his sheaf of papers. He turned.

"Five cents, lydy * * * Extry Special."

He held up a paper toward her, the poster of his paper gripped in his hand, and Fleury saw for the very first time the question boldly printed there in staring black type:

RIVER MURDER MYSTERY.
STRANGE STORY OF AN AIRSHIP FLIGHT.
IS JARDINE DEAD?

Beatrice struggled with the window. Fleury's hands raised it for her; Fleury's coin appeased the newsboy, who flung his paper with deft aim so that it lodged safely, riveting the charm of the news, among the skeletons of the brown plants on the windowsill.

"What does it mean? Quick"——He would have helped her to a chair, but she signalled imperiously to him to open the paper, and, indeed, now she had no need of assistance. Her brain seemed to have steadied, only her heart was in a tumult.

"He's dead," she whispered in a thin voice. "Is he dead?"

"I don't know—nobody knows. He went over the Channel with McAndrew—that's certain—the mechanics at the shed agreed to that. He forgot that the leaking girl knew nothing of the airship flight, that every step word he uttered assured to her. He was so added to her distress.

"McAndrew—who was McAndrew? Mr. Fleury, I know nothing. Explain——"

"McAndrew was a friend of Dick's; a doctor down in Surrey. I have him, too he's been mad on the subject of flying for years—long before the present craze became prevalent. He invented an airship three years ago and has been tinkering at it ever since—though I don't believe it had been in use for two hours together till Tuesday night when Dick went up with him."

"When Dick went up with him," she repeated breathlessly. "And—oh, why are you so slow?"

"Dear, it's not so easy to tell." His voice was horribly steady. He gripped the paper and turned away that he did might not see his speaking face. The inevitable seems to have happened. The airship was wrecked. McAndrew's body has been recovered, but there is no news of Dick——"

"No news of Dick?" The girl's voice was like an echo. It maddened him.

"They must have lost control of the ship before the Channel was crossed," he said, "and the wind simply blew them before it at a terrific pace—Inland—not most across France—for McAndrew's body was recovered from the Seine. They think that it was swept down the river from the Vosges, however as the wrecked car itself has been discovered since at a high altitude in the mountains * * * there aren't many details, Miss Charters * * * But I wonder what we who love him should hope about Dick."

She made no answer. He did not dare to look at her.

* * *

JARDINE looked up questioningly.

Nothing familiar here, nothing even. It seemed, reasoning in the aspect of the gaunt, sallow-faced woman, whose

"Mlsieu le awake, m'sieur calls," she said and the harsh French she spoke was as unintelligible to Jardine as modern Greek might have been.

"Where am I?" he asked. She shook her head, he could see that she did not understand him, and for himself Jardine could not have turned a single French phrase at the moment, familiar as the language had been to his since he was a child.

Vague words and incomplete sentences flitted about in his brain, abandoning the effort to group their elusiveness, he pointed with a gesture to be understood in all languages, to an empty number that stood on a table near the bed. The woman, keen to grasp his meaning, laughed softly.

"Oh, he is thirsty, the poor little one," she said, and moved out of his vision. Jardine closed his eyes wearily. But for faint rustlings as of low agitated talk and a plash as water was brought she had gone out, leaving him alone.

"M'sieur" the genial woman was back again, her arm beneath his head, her hand holding a glass to his lips, looking at him with a mixture of curiosity and concern in her great black eyes.

There was magic in the draught she gave him, it seemed to him. He felt new strength flow into him, new intelligence. A vest felt obscurringly between him and the bomb he knew to be the pressure surging in his brain. Once more the cool and balm of waters sounded in his ears, and he seemed to see the treefringed banks of a brown river and the flicker of light through their leaves playing on the smiling face. Once again his eyes closed.

Then, as consciousness from the pleasant shadows of the room stole out the figures of another world, he suddenly realized the sucker by the bed.

"Poor wretch!" she whispered. "Your draught works wonders, Martha. Of what unbelievable efficacy you are subjected me!" She bent and touched him gently with her fingers, but the man did not move or stir by like a log, lay there and died with the chains of sleep.

He was awake again, and the room was a place of shadows that were made ghastly by the light of a shaded reading lamp, set on a table far from the bed. He was not alone, he discovered on the second sweep of his eyes. A girl was seated the lamps was a woman, not the woman who had brought him drink, but a young, but a young and, so far as he could see, fair head bent over the pages of a book exceedingly comely woman.

He lay quite motionless, quite tentatively.

At the sound of his robe the woman looked up, closed her book and looked toward the bed. Then she rose and came over to it quickly.

LIQUID CURES ECZEMA
WHERE SALVES FAIL

In regard to s[illegible] diseases, medical authorities are now agreed on this.

Don't imprison the disease germs in your skin by the use of greasy salves, and thus encourage them to multiply. A true cure of all eczematous diseases can be brought about only by using the healing agents in the form of a liquid.

WASH THE GERMS OUT

A simple wash: A teaspoonful of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol, and other ingredients as combined in the D. D. D. Prescription. This penetrates to the disease germs and destroys them, then soothes and heals the skin—nothing else has ever done.

A 25 cent trial bottle will start the cure, and give you instant relief.

6% PLUS 100% PROFIT SHARING
A RARE OPPORTUNITY FOR BOTH LARGE & SMALL INVESTORS.

A MAN'S INVESTMENT

A man's investment invariably proves the character of the man making the investment. If he is careful and conservative he investigates before investing. If he is quick to recognize his opportunity, he does not hesitate, but acts. SUCH MEN ALWAYS SUCCEED.

A WOMAN'S INVESTMENT

It is just as necessary for women to make investments as it is for men, in fact, more so, for women need comforts in old age that men can do without. It isn't far to poverty and the distance grows shorter as you grow older. It makes no difference whether you are twenty or sixty years old, if you haven't started to save, by judicious investments, you have not started to nail up the door against the incapacity of old age; neither are you preparing for the future of those who may be dependant on you in case of your death. THINK THIS OVER and investigate the unusual investment opportunity we have to offer.

6% Plus 100% PROFIT SHARI[illegible]

An investment, at 10 cents on the dollar, which guarantees "6% Plus 100% Profit Sharing" up to the limit of the reserve fund specially set aside for that purpose, is, to say the least, worthy of your careful consideration.

Our book "THE EARNING POWER OF MONEY" gives full and complete particulars of the plan of the American Realty & Security Company which offers such an investment as the above. It also shows you WHAT YOUR MONEY IS REALLY CAPABLE OF EARNING.

If you have made investments in the past or contemplate making investments in the future you should by all means read this book. Not because we say so but because of its literary value, for it possesses none; but because it concerns YOUR FUTURE WELFARE—YOUR INCOME.

If you have $50, $60, $100 or more, or if you can save from $5 to $10 per month which you would invest in a company with the risk eliminated as nearly as possible, and with splendid possibilities for large profits, you should write at once for our book. A copy will be sent you, free, on on receipt of your request. A postal card will do, or,

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS; LATEST FINANCIAL NEWS

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

Because the stock market does not shy at things supposedly bad, it is taken for granted that it is too high. Those people who argue in this way do not figure that it may have been too low before the pres ent bull upturn.

When mica can put cash in a minute the stock do not care what they are compelled to do. Mica is the mineral from which the electric lamp chimneys are made. Since these lamps have been put on the market the mica stock has risen from $1 to $9 a share.

Strength shown by the copper and allied issues is a mighty help to the general market, which always is strong when Amalgamated feels in good fettle. Any increase for buying of the latter is more than usually good.

$ $ $

Taking into consideration the business being done lumber stocks generally fail to do nothing to show that prevailing security prices are beyond their proper level. The talk of general dividend reductions has ceased, and it is admitted that with the crops than had been hoped for the actual showing shows material improvement.

$ $ $

The recent advance of International Harvester is explained when it is seen that the company has declared the regular dividend and added to its surplus. The Government has asked to proceed against the company on the ground that it is a trust, and a decision will probably be rendered in a few days announcing its refusal to do so.

$ $ $

Stocks have had a material rise since recently for an advance was exclusively a week ago. Since then the rise has been steady. There are supporting orders just under the low prices.

$ $ $

In nine months Lacrosse and Light Company has earned 11.3 times the dividend on its three quarter preferred and within $11,125 of the amount required for a common dividend requirement, amounting to $50,000 or the full amount for the first half year and 2.3% per cent for the third quarter. The company has no common stock. In spite of an increase in expenses of $50,000 for the nine months, due to 7 per cent per annum application of the new law and half of the year Lacrosse shows 30% per cent proportionate increase in net earnings for the period and in the twelve months net for more than $200,000.

STOCK SLUMP FROM POLITICS

NEW YORK, Oct. 22.—Weakness and irregularity in prices, with many of the Standard stocks quoting fractional losses, marked the opening of the stock market to-day. The general inactivity of the market was due to general political conditions.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit was the weakest stock on the market at the opening, quoting a loss of half below yesterday's final. Steel was off nearly half a point. General Electric was the leader in the downward movement among the industrials, opening a loss at the opening of more than one point. After the first half hour of trading a slight rally took place and many of the fractional losses were made up.

AMERICAN WANT "ADS" BRING QUICK RESULTS

A LAUGH WITH EACH MUTT BOOK

Mutt and Jeff are two of the most famous characters of the day and the biggest cartoon success ever known. The demand for these pictures is so great that a large number of them have been published in book form. The cartoons thus offered to add to the gayety of the nation were selected by "Bud" Fisher, the artist who drew them, for the look and see Mutt and Jeff doing the stunts their author thinks are the funniest. The book can be obtained by presenting seven coupons clipped on consecutive days from the daily and Sunday AMERICAN, together with a small amount of cash. The coupons are printed on page two. The book will be found a constant source of amusement, in the most sombre of all sombre days.

PRAISE ELEVATED FOR QUICK WORK

A committee representing the owners of real estate, residents and business men on Hyde park, between Lafayette square and Kendall square, Cambridge, in appreciation of the quick work of the Boston elevated railway in removing the tracks on Main street over the Boston & Albany railroad, have sent President Bancroft of the elevated company a complimentary letter.

WILL LECTURE ON HYGIENE.

John Ritchie, jr., former Health Commissioner, will lecture at a meeting of the Boston Hygiene and Social Science Club, to be held at the North Bennet Street Industrial School to-morrow night.

INSPECT M'KINLEY CIRCLE.

The official inspection of William McKinley Circle, No. 15, Ladies of G. A. R., will be conducted by Department Inspector Mrs. Bessie E. Schoff, this evening at 8 o'clock in Odd Fellows' Hall, No. 2,574 Washington street, Roxbury.

The circulation of the AMERICAN is 200,000 more than its next highest competitor and 75,000 more than all the other evening papers of Boston combined.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Fish of all kinds have begun to mount the scale of rising prices. Yesterday salmon sold from the wharves at 25 cents and brought $4.50 per cask, in unbroken order, which indicates that it will sell in with corned beef hash and pate de foie gras in the list of sole luxuries this winter.

The price of fresh fish is also soaring. Fresh salted cod sold yesterday at 9 cents a pound in the vessels at T wharf yesterday. Not long ago this article here been considered a high retail price.

Lobsters have reached a record high price, three and four dollars a pair being in the retail markets. At wholesale they sell for twenty-eight cents a pound.

The only fish that seems to be plentiful and cheap are scallops. The catch has been large of late, and the price has fallen from seventy cents a quart to forty cents a quart since the opening of the season.

There are some especially fine smelts being offered in the markets at present. The best sell for forty cents a pound, but good ones can be had for twenty-five cents.

There is little swordfish to be had in the markets now, and that sells for thirty cents a pound. Swordfish have been very scarce all Summer, and the supply now on hand in the city is understood to be the last of this season.

Bluefish are quite plentiful, and sell for twenty cents a pound.

BOSTON AMERICAN

80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, OCTOBER 22, 1910

Mr. Roosevelt Gives an Exhibition of the Man Divided Against Himself

It was in every sense appropriate and fitting that former President Roosevelt should speak for his personal friend "Cabot" in the Boston Arena.

The Arena is used as a place for vigorous exercises and society sporting events.

Mr. Roosevelt's shouting and stamping and pawing were reminiscent of the recent horse show that was held there. His arm-swinging and footwork call to mind the efforts of the fancy skaters who perform there in the Winter time.

Roosevelt's performance was strictly in keeping with the atmosphere and rules of the place.

But, as a political effort, it was not in keeping with the temper of the times. As a means of aiding the very unpopular Lodge-Draper political machine, it was not a great success.

The people of Massachusetts have a keen sense of the fitness of things. They will never forgive Roosevelt—alleged insurgent, and who parades in the West as a Progressive—for speaking to them in behalf of a man who, next to Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island, is the most notorious stand-pat statesman in the country.

It was not exactly complimentary to their intelligence for Mr Roosevelt to do such a thing.

Mr Roosevelt is a remarkable man in many respects. He is one of the most skillful political gymnasts in the world. He has many admirable qualities. He has done some good deeds.

But it was poor work coming to Boston and attempting to make the people of Massachusetts believe that Lodge was in the same class with him, either as a politician or a statesman.

While, as we have said, Mr. Roosevelt has done many wonderful things, he has never accomplished the impossible.

Some people call him a very brave man. Others say that he is possessed of most reckless courage. We say the thing that he attempted last night was foolhardy.

It is impossible for Mr. Roosevelt to be an Insurgent in the Middle West and a stand-patter in New England.

It is impossible for him to be a Progressive in the great Northwest and a reactionary in the East.

Try as he may, pose as he will, it is impossible for him successfully to be such a political Jeckyl-Hyde.

A man divided against himself must fail, just as the house divided against itself must fall.

Not long ago Mr. Roosevelt declared that "our government, national and State, must be freed from the sinister influence or control of special interests."

When was Henry Cabot Lodge ever accused of being an enemy of the special interests?

Mr. Roosevelt defeated the Republican State machine of New York after a very vigorous campaign, in which his slogan was that political machines must be smashed and bosses and the tools of special interests must be driven out of politics.

And yet he comes to Boston to speak as the friend of one of the most autocratic political bosses in the country—Lodge.

The coming of Roosevelt and the speech of Roosevelt, in our opinion, will help neither Lodge nor Draper and will only serve to emphasize the desperation of the Republican machine of Massachusetts.

Uncle Sam May Take Off His Hat to Chelsea

It Came Back Better Administered and More Prosperous Than Ever

The rebuilding of Chelsea since the conflagration which devastated that city in the Spring of 1908 is a feat which has not been heralded, but nevertheless deserves national attention. It is one of the most impressive achievements in the annals of the United States. It reflects boundless credit upon the inhabitants of a sorely stricken community and upon the government which has administered its affairs since the disaster.

There have been fires in this country which destroyed more buildings and caused more financial loss, but never in ratio to population and area was a city visited by a greater calamity. The rehabilitation of Chelsea has been accomplished in less than thirty months. This showing is marvellous; it is almost miraculous. The State and the country at large have had no idea of what has been going on in Chelsea since the fire.

When that catastrophe happened there was universal sympathy and liberal relief contributions. But the contributions were but a tithe of the loss sustained, and before the work of reconstruction had begun the people of other cities, busy with their own affairs, had no time to watch Chelsea grow. But it did not need any limelight to assist it in the task of rebuilding. Its citizens went ahead under a form of government especially granted to meet its needs and did the work without trumpeting or advertising.

In spite of the fact that about 2,800 buildings, mostly dwellings, were destroyed by fire in April, 1908, and it is estimated that about two-thirds of its population was forced to move to neighboring cities or towns, the 1910 census shows its population loss was confined to a few hundreds.

The growth of Chelsea in population within a year has been, in fact, phenomenal. The census gives comparative figures. It does not tell the whole story. As a matter of fact, Chelsea is to-day assured of a brighter, more prosperous future than it had before the fire, although in that calamity it lost $17,000,000 in property absolutely obliterated. Fortunately most of the industrial plants escaped destruction and they are its population mainstays. They stimulated reconstruction, for homes for wage-earners had to be built.

Chelsea is a city which will have many more factories and shops. It is admirably located for varied manufacturing. It is bound to grow fast naturally, but when to its advantages of location were added indomitable pluck and unqualified confidence on the part of its people, the result had to be a recovery from devastation impossible in any land except the United States. The truth is that Chelsea represents the best there is in this country—fortitude, courage, industry, capability, perseverance and absolute faith in itself.

Uncle Sam can take off his hat to Chelsea. It is a city he has reason to be proud of. It did not quit. It came back better administered, more prosperous and with prospects of a more splendid future than ever.

The Sculptor and the Clay

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Examiner

The clay is ready for the modelling,
The marble waits; how beautiful, pure
That gleaming substance, and it shall endure
When dynasty and empire, throne and king
Have crumbled back to dust. Well may you pause,
Oh sculptor-artist! and before that mute,
Unshapen surface stand irresolute.
Awful indeed are Art's unchanging laws!

We all are Sculptors. By each act and thought
We form the model. Time, the artisan,
Stands with his chisel fashioning the man,
And stroke by stroke the masterpiece is wrought.
Angel or demon, choose and do not err,
For Time but follows as you shape the mould,
And finishes in marble stern and cold
The statue of the soul, the character.

DEAR little mother of troublesome children, are you worrying because you have no fortune to bestow upon your offspring?

Do you look at your wealthy neighbor and wish you could dress your boys and girls as her children are dressed, and do you lie awake nights wondering how you can manage to save money to send your children to good schools and to give them the best advantages?

Before you waste your vital forces in these anxious thoughts, stop and ask yourself if you are doing the very best you can now for these children of yours.

Are you teaching them order, and courtesy, and thoughtfulness?

Order is one of the greatest virtues.

Without order, the whole solar system would fall into chaos.

Order in the House

Order makes the foundation of comfort in a home and the foundation of success in business.

Teach your boys and your girls to put away their toys and playthings as soon as they are old enough to walk.

Help them about it at first, and laugh as you help them, until they think it part of the play.

Show them how to fold their clothes at night, and in the morning how to put away the night garments.

If they take a book from a table or shelf, teach them to put it back in the same place, and in a very few years they will have developed a habit of order which will follow them through life.

Teach them courtesy. Few American boys are courteous.

A bright boy, full of good impulses and anxious to work and help his widowed mother, was taken into a neighbor's house, shortly after he left public school, to assist in various tasks.

Neither the boy's mother nor his teachers had taught him to remove his hat when entering a room, or to knock at a door before he entered.

Necessary Courtesy

When bringing letters from the post or coming on other errands he rushed into his employer's presence and into the presence of guests and ladies of the family with his hat on his head, and without knocking. It required several admonitions to teach him this small but necessary courtesy.

Teach your boys to rise when a woman enters a room or public elevator; teach them to speak low and to attend to the care of their teeth and finger nails in their own rooms and not in public.

Impress upon their minds that gum chewing in the presence of others is vulgar.

In a crowded suburban car seventeen grown men and women stood for a full half hour while six school children retained their seats. Not one child had been taught by parents or instructors that it was part of good manners to rise and offer a seat to older people under such circumstances.

All these children belonged to well-to-do New England parents and were attending the public school in a city of international fame.

Children are the clay, parents are the sculptors, and if the children grow into ugly and unlovely men and women, marred by selfishness and lack of consideration and by bad manners it is the fault of the parents.

Shape your children into what you would like to see them become as men and women.
